House Votes For Refund Credit on March Tax

Sharp Opposition Is Expressed In Committee To 10% Sales Tax

By Edward Ryan
Post Staff Writer

An end of the postwar refund feature of the Victory tax was voted by the House yesterday while sharp opposition was expressed in the Ways and Means Committee to the 10 per cent sales levy advocated by Representative Robertson (Democrat) of Virginia.

The House action would result in granting all single persons a 25 per cent reduction, and married persons, a 40 per cent reduction in their gross victory tax, to be used as a credit against other Federal taxes next March 15.

Made Automatic

Present law gives the taxpayer the same reduction if he has bought bonds, or repaid debts, or met insurance premiums, in an equivalent amount; and also gives him a choice of taking the reduction as a credit against taxes, or saving it for refund after the war. The change makes the reduction automatic, and does away with option of saving it to claim after the war.

Senate action is needed before the change becomes law. The bill retains the present ceilings on the 25 per cent and 40 per cent credits of $500 for single and $1000 for married persons. It also includes the present 2 per cent credit for each dependent.

The House also approved further extension of them for claiming relief from the excess profits tax, and voted to remove for the duration

Widow of Kelly, First Hero of War, To Wed Friday

Los Angeles, Oct. 11 (AP).—Mrs. Colin P. Kelly, jr., widow of the Nation's first hero of World War II, will be married on Friday in Philadelphia to Dr. J. W. Pedlow, Philadelphia chemist, it was learned today.

Mrs. Kelly's brother, Tad Wick, confirmed the announcement.

The attractive widow of the gallant Army flier who died in sinking the Japanese battleship Haruna, recently had been working as a secretary in a southern California aircraft factory.

Mrs. Kelly and her 3-year-old son, Corky, came to California after receiving countless posthumous awards in honor of the 26-year-old Air Corps captain.

President Roosevelt, in a letter addressed to whomever is the Nation's Chief Executive in 1956, asked that little Corky be appointed to the United States Military Academy at West Point, in appreciation for Captain Kelly's exploits.

Parts Makers Get Ten Years For Sabotage

3 Schmellers Sold Defective Plane Castings

By the Associated Press

Cleveland, Oct. 11.—Federal District Judge Emerich B. Freed today sentenced the National Bronze & Aluminum Co.'s former president, John L. Schmeller, and the latter's two brothers, Edward and Frank, to 10 years each in a penitentiary after a jury convicted them of violating wartime sabotage laws.

The jurist also imposed fines of $10,000 each on the three industrialists, refused to permit their release on bail, and denied motions for new trials. The brothers gave no outward evidence of emotion. Frank Schmeller was the concern's general manager, and Edward Schmeller was its chief metallurgist until they were relieved of their jobs in a company reorganization earlier this year.

[In what was described by the Government as a five-million-dollar war frauds case last June, at Fort Wayne, Ind., the Anaconda Wire & Cable Co., two of its officers and three employes were fined a total of $31,100 by Federal Judge Thomas W. Slick, who since has retired from the bench. Judge Slick also imposed prison terms on the two officers and one of the employes but suspended the sentences, saying that the men already had suffered from the wide publicity and it would be in the interest of the war effort to keep them at their jobs. The company, officers and employes had been charged with supplying defective communications wire for the armed forces.—Editor's note.]

A jury last week found the Schmellers had illegally provided the Packard Motor Co. a welded casting for a Rolls-Royce warplane engine. The brothers, the company and four lesser officials were charged with "knowingly, willfully, unlawfully and feloniously "making castings "in a defective manner," "with reason to believe that their act might injure, interfere with and obstruct the United States and its associate nation, Great Britain, in preparing for and carrying on the war."

The jury acquitted the company and the four minor officials, and convicted the Schmellers on one industrial sabotage count. Government witnesses had testified welding was contrary to Army Air Force specifications.

New Yorkers' Tenth Title in 21 Years; Crosetti Standout

By Shirley Povich
Post Staff Writer

St. Louis, Oct. 11. — Morton Cooper threw a high, fast ball to the plate in the sixth inning today and Bill Dickey, crouching there, struck the blow that won the 1943 World Series for the Yankees.

The spindly-legged 36-year-old Dickey blasted the pitch into deep right field for a home run and when it fell on the bleacher roof, the roof fell in on the Cardinals in this World Series.

Because that swat produced both Yankee runs of their 2-0 victory today, with Charley Keller on base ahead of Dickey prancing over the plate in gleeful hops and pausing then to wring the hand of old-timer Dickey.

That home run was curtains for the Cardinals, a bitter wallop for the 33,872 St. Louis fans in Sportsman's Park. For the Yankees it was the series, 4 games to 1, their tenth world championship in 21 years.

Chandler Made Good

The man who made those two runs stand up was Spud Chandler, who for four innings was reeling on the ropes with the Cardinals threatening to score in every inning and had the tying runs on base in the ninth. Chandler gave up ten hits to the Cardinals, but he outlasted Cooper and two other pitchers, and pitched himself out of trouble on each occasion, especially the final one.

Big Cooper was returning to the series' pitching mound after bringing their Cardinals their lone victory in the second game, and there was high confidence among the crowd in the early innings when he struck out the first five Yankees to face him.

In a row, Cooper fanned Crosetti, Metheney, Johnson, Keller and Dickey before breaking his strike-

WLB Appeals In Truck Strike

The War Labor Board issued two appeals yesterday to halt a spreading strike of intercity truck drivers in the Southeast, as truck line operators appealed to members of Congress for assistance.

One of the appeal messages went to Daniel J. Tobin, president of the AFL Teamsters Union, telling him that the board would not attempt to act in the wage dispute so long as the strike continued.

Hospital Record Differs

Official Autopsy Report Shows 'Cured' Nurse Died of Diabetes

By Linton Burkett
Post Staff Writer

Miss Adie Mae Carroll, 42, Gallinger Hospital nurse, who died at Casualty Hospital 10 days after her discharge from a ward in Gallinger as "cured," died of diabetes mellitus, an autopsy report from Dr. A. Magruder MacDonald, District coroner, on file in the Health Department, shows.

Dr. Edgar A. Bocock, superintendent of Gallinger, said the hospital records did not show any indication Miss Carroll had diabetes. She was confined in the tubercular and the psychiatric wards there nine months.

Dr. Bocock said Miss Carroll had frequently threatened to commit suicide, and it was for that reason she was placed in the psychiatric ward. He also said that a bottle "containing a potent drug" was found at her bedside when she was taken to Casualty Hospital—ten days after her discharge from Gallinger.

Coroner MacDonald, in the report of the autopsy he conducted, specifically stated that the chemical analysis was negative.

Miss Carroll died on March 24 and the death certificate gave the cause as heart failure, but it was noted thereon that the report would not be completed until after a chemical analysis and autopsy was held on April 6.

President Asks Entry For Chinese

Urges Congress To Set Aside Exclusion Law As Victory Aid

President Roosevelt yesterday urged Congress to repeal the Chinese Exclusion Laws, and thereby correct "a historic mistake," silence "distorted Japanese propaganda," and strengthen China's faith in her allies.

Congress began putting up barriers to Chinese immigration 61 years ago. When Japanese began pouring into the country at the turn of the century, Congress adopted the policy of excluding Orientals. Then in 1924 came the law controlling American immigration by the quota system.

The 1940 census showed 37,242 foreign-born Chinese in this country, and if Congress should put immigration on a par with other countries, 105 more could be admitted annually.

Text of Message

The text of the President's message follows:

"There is now pending before the Congress legislation to permit the immigration of Chinese people into this country and to allow Chinese residents here to become American citizens. I regard this legislation as important in the cause of winning the war and of establishing a secure peace.

"China is our ally. For many long years she stood alone in the fight against aggression. Today we fight at her side. She has continued her gallant struggle against very great odds.

"Spirit of Her People"

"China has understood that the strategy of victory in this world war first required the concentration of the greater part of our strength upon the European front. She has understood that the amount of supplies we could make available to her has been limited by difficulties of transportation. She knows that substantial aid will be forthcoming as soon as possible—aid not only in the form of weapons and supplies, but also in carrying out plans already made for offensive, effective action. We and our Allies will aim our forces at the heart of Japan—in ever increasing strength

Yanks Advance In Mud to Seize Pontelandolfo; Nazis Fight Hard

By the Associated Press

Allied Headquarters, Algiers, Oct. 11.—Fighting northwestward from Benevento through Italian mud, Lieut. Gen. Mark W. Clark's forces have captured Pontelandolfo and thrown into jeopardy the entire Nazi defense position along the flood-swept Volturno River north of Naples.

Seizure of Pantelandolfo, 12 miles beyond Benevento, placed the Allies astride a main highway which winds westward to the Mediterranean above the Volturno. The Nazis either must meet this new threat successfully or resume their withdrawal toward Rome.

Enemy Fighting Hard

"The enemy continues to fight hard and is using broken and difficult country to assist his defense," said today's Allied communique. "Demolitions still are being met on a large scale."

Patrols were reported skirmishing with the Germans on the north bank of the Volturno, but no immediate effort to cross in force was expected, since German artillery was concentrated to lay a destructive fire on the more obvious crossings.

The Allied air force made shattering attacks against the Nazi defenses along the river, particularly at a point about 5 miles north of Capua. Fleets of "flying artillery" bombed and shot up dozens of enemy gun positions along a 40-mile front.

(The United Nations radio at Algiers reported artillery duels raging across the Volturno and that the Nazis appeared to be massing for a counterattack.)

British Move Ahead

On the Adriatic end of the Italian line Gen. Sir Bernard L. Montgomery's Army slugged its way slowly forward against intense opposition, averaging gains yesterday of between 2 and 3 miles along the Biferno River.

"Eighth Army patrols are pushing westward vigorously," an announcement said. Montgomery's advance has been slow since the Nazis rushed the Sixteenth armored division to oppose him five days ago.

In the advance up the backbone of Italy, which resulted in the capture of Pontelandolfo, the Allies also seized Campolattaro, Fragneto, Reino and Casaldoni. Clark was

3000 Germans Reported Killed As Reds Capture Railway Lines

By the Associated Press

London (Tuesday), Oct. 12.—The Red Army captured Gomel's eastern suburbs yesterday, killing 3000 Germans and clearing the left bank of the Sozh River opposite that vital rail hub in lower White Russia, and also widened its grip on the west bank of the Dnieper in the Ukraine, Moscow announced early today.

A communique said 1000 Germans were slain in "fruitless" enemy counterattacks seeking to stem the Russian surge beyond its three initial Dnieper bridgeheads.

(A London broadcast said Soviet forces already had "penetrated the outer defense of Kiev," Ukraine capital on the Dnieper.)

Whole Line Threatened

The capture of Novo-Belitza, a rail junction suburb of Gomel, and other localities, threatened the flanking of the entire 200-mile German line in White Russia and the severance of the enemy's already feeble connections with German Ukraine positions.

Gomel, whose railways radiate to Warsaw, Minsk and Mogilev, is the southern anchor of the German White Russian line and the center of an industrial area just above the edge of the Pripet marshes.

Transport Sunk

Two hundred miles to the north other Soviet units converging on Vitebsk, upper anchor of the enemy's defense line in White Russia, raced through 40 more villages, killed 1300 more enemy troops, captured huge quantities of equipment, and freed 40,000 Russian civilians "whom the Germans were forcibly driving to slave labor in Germany," the bulletin said.

At the southern end of the front, Soviet Black Sea Fleet airmen struck a "blow on an enemy port," presumably in the Crimea, which is

Tiny Craft Slip Into Alten Fjord, Send Torpedoes Into Big Warship

By the Associated Press

London, Oct. 11.—British midget submarines, penetrating the heavily guarded Norwegian hideout of the German fleet, have crippled the mighty battleship Tirpitz and left her apparently immobilized.

Three of the small subs—a hitherto undisclosed weapon for the British—are missing. A group of the submersibles, 1000 miles from home, threaded their way some 50 miles into narrow Alten Fjord, through minefields and heavy patrols, to attack the Tirpitz September 22, an admiralty announcement today disclosed. They attacked the Tirpitz beneath her waterline.

The size of the raiding force was not disclosed.

Reconnaissance photographs taken three weeks after the attack showed the 35,000-ton pride of the Nazi fleet had not moved from her anchorage and oil spouting from her great tanks had spread for 2 miles.

1000-Mile Trip

Usually ultra conservative, the admiralty used such terms as "involving hazards of the first order," "magnitude of the difficulties" and "the highest qualities of courage, enterprise and skill."

To reach the warships' hiding place the submarines traveled more than 1000 miles from the nearest British base.

Mine fields were penetrated and enemy protective forces were evaded before the midgets could come within striking distance.

The reconnaissance photographs showed the great battleship surrounded by smaller vessels, presumably repairing it or supplying light and power to the crippled giant.

The Germans had announced the thrust had been repulsed and that prisoners had been taken.

U. S. Fliers Hit Makassar in 2400-Mile Trip

Allied Headquarters in the Southwest Pacific (Tuesday), Oct. 12.—Making their fourth 2400-mile round trip flight from an Australian base, American-manned Liberator bombers unloaded 25 tons of explosives and started huge fires among docks, fuel and oil depots at Makassar, Dutch Celebes.

The raid, staged Saturday night and from which all the big bombers returned, was disclosed in today's communique from headquarters of General MacArthur.

It was the first raid on the Japanese base since August 18.

Guerillas Take Chernos Isle In Fiume Gulf

By the Associated Press

London, Oct. 11.—The Yugoslav liberation army claimed tonight the capture of the important island of Cherso, which commands the entrance to the Gulf of Fiume, and said it controlled the whole coast of northern Dalmatia except for the German-occupied fort at Zara.

Cherso is 25 miles east of the Italian naval base of Pola at the head of the Istrian Peninsula and 20 miles south of Fiume, which the Partisan forces of Gen. Drug Tito say they have under direct attack.

The Patriots said they had occupied all of the myriad islands along the Dalmatian coast.

The Germans were falling back in the Susak area, just across the bridge from Fiume. Other new Yugoslav successes included the capture of Bijeljina, 75 miles west of the former capital at Belgrade,

Argentina Bans Jewish Papers And Magazines

Buenos Aires, Oct. 11 (INS).—The Argentine government announced tonight that it had banned all Jewish newspapers and magazines.

At the same time it was announced that Minister of War Gen. Edelmiro Farrell had been "appointed" vice president of Argentina.

The action of the government in banning Jewish publications was the latest in a series of actions directed against minority and democratic groups in Argentina, the only South American nation that still maintains diplomatic relations with Germany.

The government, headed by Gen. Pedro Ramirez, who seized power on June 7 following a military coup d'etat, repeatedly has promised to hold democratic elections, but has failed to do so.

Publication of other Argentine newspapers has been suspended because they expressed opinions contrary to those held by the Ramirez government, among them La Noticias Gracia and Le Critica. The latter has resumed publication.

Long-Range Priorities

Low-Rent Housing Promised; Second Slum Tour Tomorrow

Reclamation Item Of 100 Million Still Before Budget Bureau

The second tour of local slum areas and National Capital Housing Authority reclamation developments by a Senate District Subcommittee will begin at 10 a. m. tomorrow with John Ihlder, NCHA executive officer.

Senator Burton (Republican) of Ohio, chairman of the subcommittee, and Senator Capper (Republican) of Kansas, one of its members, already have given enthusiastic verbal approval of NCHA projects, which they toured last Saturday.

Meanwhile Ihlder declared yesterday that the Bureau of the Budget has made no commitments on a tentative program for proposed legislation granting NCHA 100 million dollars for long-range slum reclamation over a period of 20 to 25 years.

His request, outlined last week for Senator Burton, would provide either 5 or 10 million for the first two years and 5 million annually in each successive year until completion of the plan.

Tomorrow's itinerary is expected to include slums in Naylors Alley, just off New York ave. nw.; Snows Court, between 24th and 25th sts.

Agencies Invited To Submit Requests For Postwar Building

The Federal Public Housing Authority yesterday promised a postwar priority to low-rent housing projects which were halted by the war and invited municipal housing agencies to submit applications for postwar projects to FPHA regional offices.

To be accepted for revie at regional offices, Herbert Emmerich, FPHA Commissioner said, local housing authorities must certify:

"1. That such projects will be consistent with a sound public housing program for the locality; and

"2. That such projects could be put under construction promptly after loan funds, contributions and permanent materials are available, but not more than two years thereafter."

John Ihlder, executive officer of the National Capital Housing Authority (formerly the Alley Dwelling Authority), commented that the FPHA action was "very encouraging," and indicated that local plans would be developed for submission.

Emmerich pointed out that FPHA obligations with respect to halted projects were still outstand-

Churchill Lauds Achievements Of American, British Bombers

By the Associated Press

London (Tuesday), Oct. 12.—Prime Minister Churchill declared today in congratulatory messages to the United States Eighth Air Force and the RAF that "we shall together inexorably beat the life out of industrial Germany and thus hasten the day of final victory."

Churchill said American achievements in the battle of Germany "have contributed notably to the success of Allied arms everywhere."

Churchill said that, in addition to "striking with deadly accuracy many of the most important hostile industrial installations and ports," American fliers "have inflicted serious losses on the German air force."

Churchill said the war cabinet realized the significance of the fact that the bombing of Germany had forced the German air force "from the offensive to the defensive, both operationally and in new construction."

"In broad daylight, crews of your bombers have fought their way through the strongest defense which the enemy could bring against them and have ranged over the length and breadth of Germany, striking with deadly accuracy many of the most important hostile industrial installations and ports," he told the Eighth Air Force.

"Your bombers and fighters have inflicted serious loses on the German Air Force, and, by forcing the

Pepper Asks Vote On Postwar Policy

Passage Sought to Support Roosevelt In Conferences With Churchill, Stalin

By Mary Spargo
Post Staff Writer

Senator Pepper (Democrat) of Florida, Administration stalwart, last night called for Senate passage of a clear-cut postwar resolution as soon as possible in order to strengthen the hands of the President in projected conferences with Prime Minister Churchill and Premier Stalin.

Pepper's statement was taken as an indication that the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, which meets today to hear a report of its resolutions subcommittee, is being pressed by the Administration for a quick report so that the Government can proceed with assurance of senatorial backing.

"A Doctor's Examination"

The Florida Senator yesterday appeared to discount possible adverse effects upon passage of such a resolution from reports by five globe-girdling Senators who returned with critical comments upon some of this Nation's diplomatic efforts.

While deploring the fact that so much information had leaked out of the Senate's executive sessions, Pepper said "the net result of this widespread discussion is on the whole probably going to be good."

"Reports of the returning Senators," he declared, "might be compared to a doctor's examination, disclosing some alarming symptoms whose treatment should not be put off."

Pepper said that undoubtedly disclosure of how widespread American interests were abroad, and how interwoven they are with the interests of other nations would in the end convince former isolationists that the United States must cooperate in the postwar world.

Pointing out that in contemplated conferences abroad both Stalin and Churchill can speak flatly for their governments, Pepper declared that President Roosevelt, without Senate action on a resolution committing the United States to postwar cooperation, faces a very different situation.

Basis of Urgency

"The governments of Great Britain and Russia both know that Roosevelt faces reelection next year; he might be defeated or he might have a hostile Congress. Without a clear-cut commitment of the treaty-making body behind him, both governments might well fear that his actions would be repudiated."

Pepper asserted that with the collapse of Germany possible at any time, Russia should certainly be able to know that the United States is pledged to postwar cooperation or else, bearing American history in mind, Stalin might well conclude peace negotiations without taking this country into consideration at all.

United Nations, - Nucleus

Outlining the type of resolution he desired, Pepper called for permanence of the United Nations, with a little tighter organization than at present, with a chairman or president to head it up.

Under this would be component ports able to deal, like committees, with specific subjects. He called also for a forum in which world opinion could be appealed to.

"A forum," he said, "which could be the expression of the aspirations of peoples, where complaints could be made and redress sought.

"There will have to be a tribunal to decide disputes of a judicial nature," Pepper said.

Pepper said any international agency would have to develop in the light of experience, and could not be blueprinted in advance.

Rankin Proposes Invitation

Representative Rankin (Democrat) of Mississippi proposed in a resolution that the five globe-touring Senators, Russell of Georgia, Mead of New York, Chandler of Kentucky (Democrats), and Brewster of Maine and Lodge of Massachusetts (Republicans), be invited to address the House behind closed doors. The resolution was referred to the Rules Committee, where it is likely to stay.

Meanwhile the Associated Press reported from London that criticism of lend-lease and other dealings with Great Britain had come as "something of a shock to the British public and press." The London Sunday Times' Washington correspondent was quoted as explaining that criticisms were directed more at mismanagement by Washington than at Britain.

C. V. R. Thompson, New York correspondent of the London Daily Express, was quoted as stating:

"There is hope that good will come out of it all," in the form of a clearcut American foreign policy. Official Britain was silent on the reports.

Nazi Units Encircled

The taking of Bijeljina was especially important for its command of the plains approaching Belgrade.

German forces encircled at Ogulin were said to be fighting desperately to avoid annihilation.

The Germans said they had sent bombers over Allied-occupied Lero in the Dodecanese group of islands in the Aegean.

Indications of political unrest in the Balkans came with a German announcement that the puppet Croat cabinet headed by Nikola Manditsch had resigned.

Reports from Rumania indicated a new wave of arrests there which were said to have nipped in the bud a movement to overthrow the government of Premier Ion Antonescu in favor of one more friendly to the Allies.

The Yugoslav victories were reported to be so severe a setback that the Nazis dismissed their commander in chief in Yugoslavia.

The Berlin radio, meanwhile, said Cossack troops recruited by the Russian Quisling, Lieut. Gen. Andrei Vlassov, were being used against the Patriot guerillas in Dalmatia because their "rather brutal" methods of fighting are needed "in combat with the Partisans."

Aegean Isles Hit Again

Allied Headquarters, Algiers, Oct. 11 (AP).—For the sixth straight day Allied air forces carried a sizzling attack to the enemy in Greece and the Aegean Islands yesterday, Allied headquarters announced.

Flying Fortresses again made a 1500-mile round trip without escort to blast the Nazi air base of Tatoi, just outside Athens, and the airfield at Araxos at the northwestern top of the Peleponnesus, while RAF bombers on the preceding night struck at other airfields at Maritza and Calato on the island of Rhodes.

Yesterday eight airfields in Greece, Crete and Rhodes were attacked.

In the bombing of Tatoi the Fortresses ran into 20 to 30 Nazi fighters, and shot down four, set huge fires in the hangars, exploded a fuel dump, and scattered ruin among parked planes. At Araxos they smothered the barracks and runways with bombs.

Refugees arriving at Bari, Italy, have disclosed that some Italians in Greece and Albania joined the Patriots. Others turned their arms over to the Greeks, Albanians and Yugoslavs. The Germans, using at least a dozen divisions, have had to occupy many regions formerly intrusted to Italians, and Hitler's forces have been sadly stretched to guard the long coastlines, islands, and lines of communication through the mountains.

The Germans have moved 2000 troops into Valona and other Albanian ports to meet a possible Allied invasion from Italy, it is reported.

One reason for the German air forces' weakness is told by Poles, Yugoslavs, Czechs, Slovaks and Austrians whom the Germans drafted as ground crews. These desert at the earliest moment and hide in the woods until the Allies arrive.

War Sidelights

Rocket Guns Too Late to Aid Luftwaffe

By the Associated Press

London, Oct. 11.—The Nazis' airplane rocket guns, which hurl jagged chunks of metal at Allied bombers, were invented too late to save the German air force, it appeared tonight.

On the basis of official clamis, the Germans have lost at least 500 fighters in the eight-day Allied offensive ended yesterday.

Weighed against estimates of 600 to 700 fighters a month as Germany's current production, this loss leads to the conclusion that the Nazis will find it increasingly difficult to get the fighters on which to put rocket armament.

The Allies, moreover, have concentrated on the German airplane factories to cut into the Nazis basic fighting force.

An indication of a German plane shortage was seen recently in stories of American airmen that Nazi fighters were attacking "with wheels down"—indicating emergency use of the old Stuka dive-bomber.

It appears the German air force has been transformed in the last year from an offensive force with a backbone of bombers to a defensive one. Although a large toll of German bombers has been taken on the Russian front, the production ratio has swung rapidly around in favor of fighters.

Nazi leaders have tried to conceal this from their people. Field Marshal Gen. Erhard Milch last week talked vaguely about millions of tons of bombs having been dropped and thousands of Allied planes downed "in recent years." He spoke of a "new bomber" under construction.

Giraud Unhurt in Upset

Algiers, Oct. 11 (AP).—Gen. Henri Giraud, French commander in chief, narrowly escaped death last week in eastern Algeria when his automobile turned over at 70 to 80 miles an hour, it was disclosed today.

Giraud's naval aide, Lieutenant Viret, was at the wheel. No one was injured.

Japs' Victim Known

Sydney, Australia, Oct. 11 (AP).—Prime Minister John Curtin said that the name of the Allied airman who was beheaded recently by the Japanese had been disclosed to his next of kin. He added the name would not be published. The wording of Curtin's statement indicated the man was an Australian.

enemy to weaken other fronts, have contributed notably to the successes of the Allied arms everywhere.

The Prime Minister told the RAF:

"Your command, with the day-bomber formations of the Eighth Air Force fighting alongside it, is playing a foremost part in the converging attack on Germany now being conducted by forces of the United Nations on a prodigious scale.

"Your officers and men will, I know, continue their efforts in spite of the intense resistance offered until they are rewarded by the final downfall of the enemy.

"These growing successes have only been achieved by devotion, endurance and courage for which the bomber command is renowned. Airmen and airwomen of Britain and the Dominions and our Allies have worked whole-heartedly together to perfect a mighty offensive weapon which you wield in a battle watched by the world."

Synthetic Tires Inferior, Says Goodrich Head

Buffalo, N. Y., Oct. 11 (AP).—Synthetic tires are not as good as tires made of natural rubber, John L. Collyer, president of the B. F. Goodrich Rubber Co., said last night. Collyer said tests of synthetic truck tires at 45 miles per hour show a ratio of performance of only 35 to 55 per cent of that of natural rubber tires. In other words, he said, synthetic truck tires stand up only half as well as natural tires.

"We're still in a rubber crisis and it is vitally important that everyone conserve rubber to the best of his ability," Collyer stated.

52 Dead, 102 Injured In Mexican Hurricane

Mexico City, Oct. 11 (AP).—The Pan-American Meteorological Service said tonight that a hurricane which swept the west coast of Mexico and left 52 dead and 102 injured along a 150-mile stretch around Mazatlan was headed for the United States.

The report said that the hurricane, which struck Saturday, was whipping Chihuahua State on the United States border after streaking across Sinaloa and Durango. It was moving toward Arizona, New Mexico and Texas, the report added, but much of its force was spent.

now threatened from two sides by the Russians, and sank a 2000-ton enemy transport and 11 barges and cutters, the communique said.

"Many other ships standing in the port were damaged seriously," it added.

A total of more than 5300 Germans fell on all fronts during the day, the bulletin said, 58 planes were shot down, and scores of enemy tanks and guns were captured or destroyed.

The midnight supplement to the communique said the Germans counterattacked furiously on the west bank of the Dnieper, but the Russians fought their way forward "step by step."

Five Attacks Smashed

One Soviet unit was declared to have smashed five such attacks, knocking out 29 enemy tanks. Soviet airmen supporting the swelling ground offensive beyond the secured bridgeheads were said to have bagged 19 planes and silenced many enemy firing points.

In heavy day and night fighting beyond the punctured Dnieper River line the Russians "continued their offensive in the same directions as before, extending their bridgeheads and considerably improving their positions," the communique said.

Dispatches said the Germans possibly were pulling out of a Kiev already as succesful Russian crossings of the Dnieper above and below the Ukranian capital imperilled the city, which is under fire from Soviet big guns mounted on the eastern bank.

"Our divisions have penetrated far beyond the river," said a Pravda correspondent, "and have captured the defense zone of the Germans along the river and dozens of settlements on the western bank."

Nazis Fight Furiously

Furious German resistance was acknowledged. In Sunday's fighting, 126 enemy tanks were knocked out, and 85 planes shot down.

The smash into Novo-Belitsa made Gomel's fall imminent. Its capture would dissolve Germany's southern defense anchor in White Russia, and open the way for a drive on the capital at Minsk.

It also would leave the Germans only a circuitous route across the Pripet marshes connecting their sagging northern and southern fronts. That route is the Zhlobin-Mozyr-Korosten railway 45 miles west of Gomel, the last lateral Axis-held line short of the Polish border.

In the north, Russian troops were less than 20 miles from Vitebsk and above that sector other units were plunging toward the Latvian border through the shattered German line at Nevel.

Heavy German Reserves

The Germans were reported throwing in large reserves on the Nevel, White Russian and Dnieper River fronts, but an avalanche of Russian gains since July have so chewed up Axis communications that the Germans no longer can easily switch material and manpower to threatened sectors.

President Asks End to Chinese Ban

until the common enemy is driven from China's soil.

"But China's resistance does not depend alone on guns and planes and on attacks on land, on the sea and from the air. It is based as much in the spirit of her people and her faith in her Allies. We owe it to the Chinese to strengthen that faith. One step in this direction is to wipe from the statute books those anachronisms in our law which forbid the immigration of Chinese people into this country and which bar Chinese residents from American citizenship.

"Nations, like individuals, make mistakes. We must be big enough to acknowledge our mistakes of the past and to correct them.

"By the repeal of the Chinese Exclusion Laws, we can correct a historic mistake and silence the distorted Japanese propaganda. The enactment of legislation now pending before the Congress would put Chinese immigrants on a parity with those from other countries. The Chinese quota would, therefore, be only about 100 immigrants a year. There can be no reasonable apprehension that any such number of immigrants will cause unemployment or provide competition in the search for jobs.

The extension of the privileges of citizenship to the relatively few Chinese residents in our country would operate as another meaningful display of friendship. It would be additional proof that we regard China, not only as a partner in waging war, but that we shall regard her as a partner in days of peace. While it would give the Chinese a preferred status over certain other Oriental people, their great contribution to the cause of decency and freedom entitles them to such preference.

"I feel confident that the Congress is in full agreement that these measures—long overdue—should be taken to correct an injustice to our friends. Action by the Congress now will be an earnest of our purpose to apply the policy of the good neighbor to our relations with other peoples."

Portugal May Cede Bases in Azores To the Allies

Bern, Switzerland, Oct. 11 (AP).—Allied warships are policing the waters off the Azores, Portuguese islands in the Atlantic, a reliable source said tonight, and there were unconfirmed rumors that Portugal would cede naval bases to the Allies.

A dispatch from Madrid, where interest has been manifest as to Portugal's recent strengthening of her military establishment, said the report of the ceding of bases was heard there, but was not verified.

Vichy in Debt Trillion Francs

Algiers, Oct. 11 (AP).—The French Commissariat for the Interior in the Government said today the Vichy French public debt totalled 1121 billion francs (approximately $24,662,000,000 at the prewar rate) on last June 30, according to underground intelligence.

The commissariat said the German occupation was costing the French twice their total revenues, citing figures for the three months ending June 30, in which it was said Vichy paid Germany 62 billion francs for occupation expenses, while the regime receipts were only 28 billion francs.

WLB Acts to Halt Truck Driver Strike

More Than 4400 Reported Idle in South As Walkout Spreads to St. Louis

The War Labor Board yesterday issued two appeals to halt a spreading strike of intercity truck drivers in the Southeast as truck-line operators appealed to members of Congress for assistance.

During the day the strike spread across the Mississippi to St. Louis, where an estimated 2000 were believed idle. The Associated Press estimated that more than 4400 drivers and helpers were idle in Atlanta, Birmingham, Nashville, New Orleans, Memphis, and St. Louis.

WLB Chairman William D. Davis telegraphed Daniel J. Tobin, president of the AFL Teamsters' Union, reminding him that the Board would not take action on pending wage-increase petitions until the strike was ended. Davis said he was counting on "further cooperation" from Tobin, who is generally regarded as one of the administration's strongest supporters in the labor movement.

Appeal to Locals

Carl Schedler, deputy executive director of WLB, sent a separate telegram to officials of two St. Louis locals ordering them to return to their jobs at once and adding, "This work stoppage is seriously interrupting the transportation of vital materials and is in violation of labor's pledge and the national policy of the Government that there shall be no strikes for the duration of the war."

Davis had sent a telegram to Tobin Friday asking his help, but Tobin's reply complained about WLB delay in handling trucking cases.

Cities fringing the strike zone, including Jackson, Miss.; Knoxville, Tenn., Montgomery, Ala., and Jacksonville, Fla., reported terminals packed with overdue shipments as a result of the stoppages.

In the Birmingham district alone, 1.5 million pounds of freight was jammed on docks.

Vans Turned Back

Roving bands of strikers at St. Louis covered the city in automobiles, turning back loaded vans. The number of idle drivers increased hourly.

"If you're not sick, get sick," one St. Louis driver said he was told when ordered back to the garage. Another turned-back driver said there was "no use getting your head knocked off."

Nashville operators sent telegrams to all members of the Tennessee congressional delegation asking "immediate action" to settle the strike and asserting that "the Teamsters' Union has not been sincere in their attempts to end the strike."

Some company and union spokesmen blamed the strike on War Labor Board delay in acting on a long-pending request for higher wages and longer vacations.

Business Manager P. H. Hall of the Atlanta local, however, said the 1300 members of his group were "striking against the operators" because they rejected a proposal that would have raised wages from $30.24 to $39.20 a week pending settlement of the WLB case. Hall said the strike was unauthorized.

The Army's Fourth Service Command said it had not authorized use of Army trucks to move tied-up war materials, but that Army depot trucks were moving supplies from depots to destinations in some cases.

Restrictions Eased On Publication Of Weather Data

The Office of Censorship announced last night that "improved defense and other war conditions" have made it possible to remove practically all restrictions on the publication and broadcasting of official weather information.

Effective today newspapers no longer are required to restrict official weather forecasts, reports of weather conditions and temperature charts to any designated area.

Radio stations, at the same time, will be permitted to resume broadcasting of official weather forecasts and other weather data except wind direction and barometric pressure.

In announcing the new policy, the Office of Censorship said.

"The diminishing benefits from weather restrictions now appear to be overbalanced by the inevitable handicaps imposed on farming, aviation, shipping and other essential activities by inadequate weather information.

Supply Situation on Metals Easing Off, Lumber and Rubber Problems Still Critical

By Ben W. Gilbert
Post Staff Writer

Lumber—once touted as a wartime substitute for steel and other critical metals—paradoxically has become one of the most critical raw materials, while the supply of steel, copper, and aluminum has become considerably easier, an informed War Production Board official disclosed yesterday.

Sufficient lumber would be available to meet inflated war demands if an additional 60,00 workers were brought into the woods. Since it is extremely unlikely that anywhere near this number will be recruited, WPB is considering the imposition of tighter controls on the use of wood.

Supplies of aluminum are being produced in excess of controlled wartime requirements, permitting stockpiling of ingots for use when the heavy bomber production program shifts into high gear next year. Meanwhile, quantities of secondary aluminum are being made available for civilian uses and may begin appearing in finished products if sufficient manpower can be obtained to process the metal.

Program Deferred

A projected 200-million-pound aluminum expansion program has accordingly been deferred.

Requests for steel for the first quarter of next year now being submitted indicate that our carbon steel supply will be about 10 per cent short of requirements—more nearly in balance than at any time since Pearl Harbor. With "water" squeezed out of requests, officials expect to balance supply and demand without too much difficulty.

The requests for steel for the civilian economy for the first quarter are expected to run about 25 per cent above the current quarter, with approval of a considerable portion of the requested increase expected.

Steel to permit restricted resumption of the manufacture of electric irons and washing machines probably will be granted in the first quarter, permitting the items to return to the market later in 1944. Steel may also be allotted to the manufacture of refrigerators if an equitable rationing system can be devised.

Copper in Balance

Supplies of copper are expected to be in balance with demand, except for some brass foundry operations where a manpower shortage is impeding production.

Officials, well pleased with the easier situation with metals, caution that no overall lifting of restrictions may be expected because such an action would immediately skyrocket demand at least 30 per cent.

Another nonmetallic material—rubber—is expected to continue to be a troublemaker into next year, and possibly even in 1945 in spite of the expansion of the synthetic rubber production program, because of the need of drawing on our limited stockpile of natural rubber to make certain types of tires.

Enormous quantities of lumber are used to crate military items shipped abroad; large quantities have been used to substitute for steel in construction work.

Harold Boeschenstein, who helped develop the successful controls over steel, aluminum and copper, has been given the job of working out new controls on lumber.

Already, WPB has permitted the use of reinforced concrete requiring steelbars in building construction instead of wood.

Union Sues Firm For $500,000 Bonuses

Pittsburgh, Oct. 11 (AP).—Suit was filed in United States District Court today by the United Steel Workers of America (CIO) against the Mesta Machine Co. of Pittsburgh to recover for the union's members an estimated $500,000 in underpayments under the Federal wages and hours law. An additional equal amount as liquidated damages is asked, bringing the total claim to approximately one million dollars.

The complaint charges the Mesta company failed to include the incentive bonus earnings of its employes in computing the time and one-half payment for overtime, which the law requires.

AFL Action Evades Approval of Fourth Term

By Jack Vincent
International News Service Staff Writer

Boston, Oct. 11.—The American Federation of Labor convention refused tonight to adopt a resolution which would have voiced approval of President Roosevelt's domestic and foreign policies.

In this manner, it evaded taking any action that might be construed as federation blessings for the Democrats in next year's presidential campaign or the fourth-term question.

The resolution, sponsored by the AFL's Retail Clerks Union, said that "President Roosevelt has consistently held a progressive and far-sighted view on domestic and foreign matters." It then praised Mr. Roosevelt's support of organized labor, and pledged cooperation to the President.

The resolutions committee, headed by Matthew Woll, head of the photoengravers, in reporting on the measure urged that it be sent to the executive council. This was done by the convention without debate.

With the neat parliamentary maneuver, the AFL maintained its traditional "no politics" stand. In presidential campaigns, it has its leaders serving on both the Republican and Democratic national committees.

It also appeared tonight that the federation would adopt a middle-of-the-road resolution proclaiming that no one should be barred from trade union membership because of race, creed or color. The latter was a substitute for other proposals urging that the federation face the Negro race problem realistically.

The sixth day of the convention ended just as debate over the Negro question broke out on the floor. The Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters was fighting for resolutions proposing a national commission on race relations, urging disbandment of auxiliary AFL unions, condemning industries which bar Negroes and denouncing segregation of Negroes in Army camps.

However, the substitute was reported out by the resolutions committee amid charges by Negro delegates that the federation was dodging the issue.

One delegate, A. Philip Randolph, said that "unions must eliminate color bars to save their own hides." Himself a Negro, he said that the race question was America's No. 1 problem, warned that Japanese and Nazi agents may use race discrimination incidents to stir up trouble.

The convention earlier adopted resolutions opposing return of prohibition and so-called incentive wage plans. Other documents adopted attacked the National Labor Relations Board and called for a centralization of Government labor policy in Washington.

Earlier, Paul V. McNutt, chairman of the War Manpower Commission, told the meeting that union rules limiting output or wasting manpower were incompatible to the war effort.

McNutt spoke to the 600 delegates shortly before the federation's resolutions committee began its report. It was indicated that the committee would not make known its stand on the proposal of John L. Lewis to return to the AFL until tomorrow or Wednesday.

This, in turn, indicated that the UMW president would not be welcomed back before the convention ends Thursday or Friday. However, it was reported that a "deal" already has been worked out under which the 600,000 members of Lewis' United Mine Workers Union would be taken back into the federation shortly thereafter.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

By Drew Pearson

BIG BILL JEFFERS has left town, giving the impression that all is well with rubber, but the pinch in production of new synthetic rubber tires has already begun.

Jeffers did not disclose that actual production of tires is falling 50 per cent behind schedule. The synthetic rubber is coming out in good quantity, but the job of converting that rubber into tires is lagging dangerously.

Exact figures cannot be disclosed for reasons of security, but officials here do not conceal the fact that the production of tires, month by month, is only 50 to 60 per cent of the estimates of the rubber director's office.

Synthetic rubber began coming out of the factories around January 1, and all new tires for civilian purposes have been made of wholly synthetic rubber since the first of April.

But there are severe shortages of fabric material, tire-making equipment, and manpower. These shortages, rather than rubber, are holding back new tires.

This is why OPA has denied most motorists the right to buy new tires. Until a few days ago, anybody who drove as much as 241 miles a month (only 18 miles a day) could get a certificate for a new tire if an old tire wore out.

Now the figure has been upped to 601 miles a month. This means that 75 per cent of U. S. cars will be eligible for only "grade three" or used tires.

Dealers today have "working inventories" of new tires amounting to only one million, as against a desired figure of four million, and a normal peacetime figure of 16 million.

NOTE: Most serious is the truck tire situation. Current requirements call for 750,000 new truck tires per month, but spokesmen for the industry warn that not more than 300,000 should be expected.

Capital Chaff

Gov. Tom Dewey, dining the other day with ex-Congresswoman Ruth Pratt of the Standard Oil millions, reaffirmed that under no circumstances would he run for the Presidency . . . John H. Perry, the Florida publisher, had to fill out no less than 11 forms in an effort to try to buy a dump truck for his Kentucky farm. But though the truck had awaited a customer for two years and the tires were deteriorating, the local OPA Board said No. Finally Parson Albion Arnold, for whom Perry is rebuilding a Baptist Church, threatened to denounce the board from his pulpit. It looks as if Perry would now get the dump truck . . . The American Red Cross has received many indignant letters saying Mrs. Roosevelt had no right to wear a Red Cross uniform on her South Pacific trip; also claiming the ARC was playing politics by sponsoring the First Lady's jaunt . . . To this the Red Cross replies: (1) It did not pay Mrs. R.'s expenses; (2) she had every right to wear a Red Cross uniform, having been an active canteen worker in the last war and honorary chairman of the National Committee on Voluntary Service in this war; (3) Red Cross Chairman Norman Davis asked Mrs. R. to visit American hospitals in the South Pacific.

Curley Wants Friends

CONGRESSMAN JAMES M. CURLEY, former Governor of Massachusetts and many times Mayor of Boston, long has been a bitter foe of White House assistant David Niles. One of the leading liberals of Boston, Niles has been a thorn in Curley's side, and the big, burly Massachusetts politician has gone out of his way to spread critical stories about him.

But the other day, coming down on the train from Boston to Washington, Niles saw his Pullman compartment door pushed open and there stood his old critic, Jim Curley.

"Dave," said Curley, "I know you feel I've said some bad things about you, but I want you to know that I think you and I ought to work more harmoniously together. We can do a lot of things if we pull together."

Niles did not appear too enthusiastic, but Curley persisted.

"You and I ought to be seen together in public occasionally," Curley suggested, "so that people will realize that we are friends."

The meeting ended inconclusively. Niles gave no promises.

Spanish Discrimination

FAIR-MINDED Assistant Secretary of War Jack McCloy has tried to rectify the Army's former unfair discrimination against youngsters who fought in the Spanish civil war, many of them barred from either commissions or combat service. However, there is still room for improvement.

One Spanish veteran is Robert Thompson, who commanded a company of Loyalist troops in Spain. Enlisting after Pearl Harbor, he went to the South Pacific, where he was cited for bravery by MacArthur.

Thompson, only a sergeant, recommended a plan by which his company could cross a stream in the face of enemy fire. The plan was for Thompson to swim the stream, pulling a rope after him, and then use the rope to steady the other men as they crossed. The plan was successful and the Japs were routed.

MacArthur recommended Thompson for the Distinguished Service Cross and a captaincy. After considerable delay the citation was granted, but the captaincy was withheld by the brass hats.

Merry-Go-Round

AMERICAN DOUGHBOYS in Iran have found a good way to dodge United States military police and get out of camp at night. They take advantage of the Mohammedan custom of veiling their women and slip on a full-length, cover-all veil which Iranian women wear from head to toe. Military police have been instructed to protect Iranian women and prevent all flirting, so they don't dare stop a veiled figure to ask her (or him) to lower the veil, and see whether an American doughboy is behind it . . . Though corn is scarce in the U. S. A., it is scarcer in Mexico, and special good neighbor envoy Dr. Francisco Del Rio of San Antonio has come from President Avila Camacho to see if some United States corn, badly needed as it is here, cannot flow across the border . . . Political scouts report that in addition to the swimming pool presented to Senator Happy Chandler, another thing which sent his stock to such a low ebb was the motion picture debut of his Hollywood daughter. Kentucky home folks were not invited to the theater while society bigwigs were.

Senate Committee To Sift Postwar Job Programs

The Senate Postwar Economic Policy and Planning Committee announced yesterday it will "sift" domestic postwar plans of scores of public and private agencies in search for legislative formulae for putting 15 to 20 million people to work after the war.

Chairman Walter F. George called a meeting of the group today to hear a report on Pacific Coast planning by Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney (Democrat) of Wyoming, chairman of the subcommittee on industrial reorganization. At the same time the committee will release a synopsis of postwar studies by some 20 agencies interviewed for the committee by George P. Comer and Fred E. Burquist, Justice Department economists.

George said his committee plans no master postwar bill of its own, but will route legislative suggestions to the various Senate committees having jurisdiction.

BACK THE ATTACK—WITH WAR BONDS

He eats twice as much as You!

The fighting man is an active man. His hours are long, his duties strenuous, the demands on his strength extreme. Whether drilling or marching; on maneuvers or in combat, he needs hearty food and plenty of it—twice as much, in fact, as the average civilian.

This makes another big job for the American Railroads, for the food that goes into the soldier's mess-tin comes from all parts of America. So, day and night, the food trains roll—an endless procession bound for a multitude of Army camps and shipping ports. Yes, every day the railroads carry nearly 30 million pounds of food for our fighting men alone.

But helping keep fighters fit to fight is only part of the food transportation job the Baltimore & Ohio and the other Railroads are doing. Every day, nearly three million dollars' worth of food must be moved by the Railroads for shipping to our Allies. And all this is in addition to feeding—and feeding well—126,000,000 Americans on the home front.

We are sure the American people, with Victory in mind as the first consideration, will agree with the 70,000 B&O workers that "fightin' food" comes first these days.

Immediate Court-Martial of Kimmel Demanded by Rep. Cole

By the Associated Press

An immediate court-martial to bring out "all the facts, conditions and circumstances" of the successful Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor December 7, 1941, was demanded yesterday by Representative Cole (Republican) of New York.

Cole made his demand in commenting on published reports that Admiral Husband E. Kimmel, who was naval commander at Pearl Harbor at the time of the attack, has written the Navy Department asking such a quick trial.

The Navy did not confirm the reports immediately. It said that no such letter had been received as yet. At Denver, Col. Harry Leonard, Marine Corps, said he had been retained by Kimmel as counsel and that a letter was written last week, but he declined to discuss its nature.

[At New York, the International News Service said that Admiral Kimmel denied yesterday reports that he had requested an immediate court-martial.

[It reported the admiral had said in a prepared statement:

["Referring to the various statements in the public press today as to a recent letter alleged to have been drafted by me to the Secretary of the Navy:

["I have not sent or authorized anyone to send such a letter. My position is and has been that I do feel that I am entitled to a court-martial and will welcome one at any time. However, I realize that a court-martial at this time could only be had at the expense of the war effort because of the resulting interferences with the very important duties of essential witnesses of high rank now in the active theaters of war and the difficulty of assembling them."—Editor's note.]

Cole, a member of the House Naval Committee, said:

"I feel Admiral Kimmel's request should be granted so that all of the facts, conditions and circumstances surrounding the attack on Pearl Harbor may be brought into the open.

"This will not only fix responsibility for someone's failure but will determine what needs to be done so that such a thing won't happen again."

Cole said that if the Navy Department does not order the court-martial he will ask Congress to direct the department to do so or to create a special committee to hear Kimmel's case.

"It is not fair to the public, nor to Kimmel," Cole commented, "to keep sealed information that with the passage of itme is bound to be disssipated."

A two-year statute of limitations applying to such cases expires next December 7. However, the War Department announced on October 2 that Kimmel and Lieut. Gen. Walter C. Short, former Army commander at Hawaii, had "voluntarily agreed to waive the statute of limitations."

When General Short was asked at Dallas today whether he had requested an immediate trial, he said: "Information on that you must get from the War Department."

U. S. Advance At Volturno Imperils Foe

Garibaldi required 24 days to get his army across the stream in 1859 when marching on Rome from Naples to unify Italy. Clark was said to expect to beat Garibaldi's mark.

Picture of Coming Storm

"The armies face each other across the narrow, flooded Volturno awaiting the signal that will touch off one of the biggest battles of the war.

"American artillery has hammered enemy positions without cessation for three days. The Germans reply, usually at night, with the heaviest type shells.

"Advanced positions are so close that we could see Nazi military road markings. Shells are plastering the whole position. I saw direct hits registered on a large house 2 miles beyond the river. Germans scuttled across the fields, abandoning an apparently wrecked troop carrier.

"Another concentration of fire landed all around an enemy machine-gun nest which was located by a doughboy patrol.

Pontalone Blasted

"The town of Pontalone, 3 miles north of the river, was blazing from end to end, columns of smoke rising high. The artillery still was shelling the town.

"The site of the coming battle is a cup-shaped valley almost completely ringed with hills. We hold the southern and southeastern slopes. The Germans are entrenched solidly in the north. They probably are relying upon defense-in-depth, having sunk their tanks in the earth for use as artillery and covered large areas with barbed wire and concrete pillboxes.

"Their machine-gun nests, however, are on the bank of the river itself.

"Almost nightly, American patrols cross the river into enemy territory."

Food Output Due to Top 10-Year Mark

While food demands on the United States give every indication of growing during the coming year, the Department of Agriculture yesterday issued an encouraging estimate of production which would indicate that while the yield this year will not equal the record year of 1942, it will be above the ten preceding years.

Encouraging also was the report on chicken and egg production. Egg production was reported to have been 9 per cent above the previous high of September, 1942, and 43 per cent above the ten-year average.

Also there was reported to have been a record number of young chickens in all sections of the country on October 1. The increase in this area was 21 per cent.

The report painted a darker picture of milk production, which declined more than usual in September but then not as much as it declined during September 1942.

Poor Pasture

Locally, severe drought conditions resulted in "extremely poor" pastures. Only six States in the country, Maine, Vermont, Georgia, Arizona, Nevada and California, showed better pasture conditions than last year.

Tame hay yields, which will be used to feed the dairy herds and other stock during the coming winter, are somewhat higher than anticipated a month ago. Also in the dry area, which extended from Maryland to Oklahoma, the lespedeza hay yields have been higher than anticipated.

The potato yield is placed at 469,545,000 bushels as compared with 371,150,000 bushels in 1942.

Production of 46,640,000 boxes of oranges, or 12 per cent more than was produced in 1942, is anticipated. These include the early and midseason crops, from which supplies are drawn from October 1 to May 1.

The grapefruit yield is expected to be about two million boxes short of last season's.

In general the report lists bumper crops of potatoes, rice, beans, peas and peanuts.

7% Drop Expected

As a whole the entire food production of the country is expected to be about seven percent below the banner year 1942.

The wheat crop is about average, but there was a large carryover and wheat stocks on farms on October 1 were 58 percent above the average.

The apple crop has been found short, as also fresh vegetables, but the later have been supplemented by victory gardens, the yields of which, necessarily, have not been reported.

More than three billion bushels of corn is expected to be harvested, which will not equal the record of 1942, but may be as high as any harvested prior to that of last year.

There also will be an increase of 12 per cent in the amount of livestock raised this year. A total of 50 billion pounds live weight is expected to be produced.

New Head of Zionist Council Appeals for an Open Palestine

Dr. Abba Hillel Silver, newly elected chairman of the executive committee of the American Zionist Emergency Council, in a statement here yesterday said the council has opened an appeal for the abrogation of the British White Paper of 1939 which would close Jewish immigration into Palestine on March 31 next year. He said:

"Palestine is the last refuge for those European Jews who are left" and that "two million have been slaughtered in Europe during the past 18 months." Dr. Silver issued his statement at the Washington office of the council, 1720 16th st. nw.

The White Paper, he said, provides that no more Jewish immigration will be permitted into Palestine without Arab consent, and prohibits Jewish purchase of land in most parts of Palestine when it goes into effect on March 31 of next year.

Dr. Silver said the White Paper is a "unilateral repudiation of an international obligation."

If the provisions of the paper are carried out, he asserted, it will mean that the Balfour declaration of 1917 has been scrapped. The declaration, which was indorsed by the League of Nations and the United States Congress, granted unlimited Jewish immigration into Palestine and provided for the setting up of the Jewish homeland there.

The Zionist Council is carrying its drive to the people of the United States and Britain, Dr. Silver said.

Fisher for Sales Tax

In the Ways and Means Committee, Dr. Irving Fisher, professor emeritus of economics at Yale, touched off a flurry of discussion about the sales tax proposal when he testified in favor of a tax on spending.

Representative Robertson asked whether Fisher agreed with the estimate of Economic Stabilization Director Vinson that a 10 per cent retail sales tax would increase the cost of living 8 per cent.

Fisher said that the increase might be even greater than 8 per cent by the indirect effect in lowering health and efficiency. Robertson challenged the argument, and said that in Great Britain the best record of general health in that nation's history had come during the war while they had a sales tax.

Lynch Against Plan

Representative Lynch (Democrat) of New York, however, suggested that the forthcoming increase in allowances for dependents of servicemen would be considerably reduced by a sales tax. Fisher agreed.

In a later statement, Lynch told reporters he was "unalterably opposed to a Federal sales tax."

Representative Reed (Republican) of New York suggested that a sales tax would deal unequally, for example, between two families having the same income, but with only one child in the first family, and five children in the second family. Fisher said that would be one of a number of inequalities under the sales tax.

North Carolina Experience

Another witness, however, Dr. J. E. Shepherd, president of the North Carolina College for Negroes, said that while the sales tax was politically unpopular it would be fair in conjunction with the income tax structure. He cited State success with a sales levy in North Carolina, but pointed out that food and other necessities were exempted. He urged a national sales levy.

The committee also heard Curtis C. Snyder, engineer for Republic Steel Co., urge an incentive sales tax, with the tax to be treated as a loan and refunded after the war.

R. V. Fletcher, vice president of the Association of American Railroads, opposed the Treasury plan to raise the tax on travel to 25 per cent. Emil Nathan, jr., executive director of the Wine and Spirits Wholesalers of America, Inc., urged that any increase in liquor excises be limited to the war period.

In the meantime the report on Gallinger, which is being prepared by Senators Bushfield (Republican) of South Dakota and Buck (Republican) of Delaware, both members of the Senate Subcommittee Investigating the Hospital, has been delayed for a day or two.

It was explained that there was a delay in obtaining a transcription of the evidence.

It is hoped the report will be ready for release today or tomorrow.

Senator Bushfield said he intended to conduct an investigation into the death of Miss Carroll.

Japanese Help Allies Take Benevento

By International News Service

With the Fifth Army, Oct. 11.—Full-blooded Japanese soldiers of American birth fought their first engagement at Benevento, it can now be disclosed.

They were under fire four long days. In that time, they participated in two firing bouts. Taro Suzuki, a native of Honolulu, was leading his force forward in a hotly disputed area, when their fire-baptism came.

"Three machine guns opened up on us," Suzuki said, "but we took care of them. Subsequently the Nazis opened with everything they had—they let go with mortars, rifles and artillery. But our mortars subdued all this Nazi wrath."

The honor of taking the first prisoner was shared by Sergt. Edward Kiota of Honolulu and Sergt. Daniel Wada of Hawaii, as patrol leader.

Sergt. Yutaka Nezu led his squad into the deserted town to bring out 22 American paratroopers who had been behind enemy lines for 16 days.

OPA Refuses Retail Boost In Milk Price

By Christine Sadler
Post Staff Writer

The Office of Price Administration replied "no" again yesterday to Congressmen asking an increase in the retail price of milk to replace the feed subsidy put into effect this month as compensation for dairymen unable to sell at prices high enough to cover cost of production.

OPA Chief Prentiss M. Brown wrote Senator McClellan (Democrat) of Arkansas:

"It is impossible for this office to permit general price increases to maintain production in view of the President's hold-the-line order."

McClellan is coauthor of a pending bill to abolish feed subsidy payments and require officials to allow a milk-price increase of about 1 cent a quart. He had written Brown a "final appeal."

He charged in his letter that "inaction, indecision, procrastination and failure to meet the issue squarely has resulted in extreme distress to farmers and milk producers, and has produced a sharp curtailment in production."

War Food Administration officials meantime were studying costs of the feed subsidy program under which dairymen will be paid 25 to 50 cents per hundredweight of milk to offset feed cost increases permitted while milk prices remained stationary. They expressed belief a summary estimate should be finished this week.

Funds for the subsidy came from the Commodity Credit Corp., which is asking an additional half billion dollars of this Congress and an extension of life unfettered by rules against "necessary subsidy programs." The House Banking Committee is continuing its hearings on the CCC plea, with members apparently willing to grant the money—but still undecided on the subsidy limitations to be written in.

Food Developments

Other food developments yesterday included:

1. Announcement by WFA of a licensing program for suppliers who sell foods to ships. Under its provisions, effective November 15, suppliers will be permitted to build up and maintain inventories sufficient to service ships without "jeopardizing the civilian supply" of food in harbor cities, such as New York, Boston and Norfolk.

2. The OPA—which recently reduced the maximum prices of "quick-frozen eviscerated broilers, fryers, roasters, capons, fowl, stags and old roosters" by 2 cents a pound—allowed a temporary increase of 1 cent a pound over the new maximums.

The temporary increase was permitted while OPA studies the claims of the industry that prices of these foods were forced out of line by the former action.

Lend-Lease Stirs Jealousy In Latin America, Butler Says

By the Associated Press

Senator Butler (Republican) of Nebraska, who recently made a one-man survey of Latin America, declared yesterday that the United States is stirring up bitter jealousies among some of the smaller South American nations through unequal allocation of Lend-Lease supplies, especially military airplanes.

The Nebraska Senator said lots of "disgusting and nutty" projects were being carried out in South America with American money, and that one of the greatest potential trouble-breeders involved the military planes.

"If one country gets a few less planes than one of its neighbors," he said, "it immediately figures the United States is building up the neighbor for some ulterior purpose."

Meanwhile, General Manuel Tovarias, commander of the Chilean air force, said yesterday that all equipment his country receives through lend-lease is destined exclusively for the defense of Chile and the continent.

In a press conference at the Pentagon Building, General Tovarias declared that the army and navy, as well as the air force of the long narrow South American republic, are patroling vital copper and nitrate centers along the Pacific, against the danger of attack. It has been expected that Chile would supply 25 per cent of United States consumption of copper this year.

Catalina patrol plants acquired from the United States through lend-lease and manned by Chilean personnel, are patroling strategic coastal points, said the commander, who is the gest of the United States Army Air Forces. In addition to a few Catalinas, Chile has acquired training planes in the same way, he said. Chile's chief air problem is that of training personnel, General Tovarias added, saying the chief object of his visit is to study United States methods.

Civilian Sole Leather Quota Raised by WPB

By the Associated Press

The War Production Board yesterday channeled to civilians additional supplies of sole leather for shoe repairs.

Quicker, Better Payroll Handling

Makes New Man-hours of Office Time

A BUSINESS leader said recently: "Our country's greatest advantage in warfare is not our manpower, not our gold, not even our great natural resources. It is the American genius for using time. Our people can do more with less of it than any other nation in history."

Today, under the stress of war, this genius is flowering everywhere. For Americans know that every time-making idea makes for an earlier victory.

▲ FOR INSTANCE—this week many offices will produce today's complex payroll records in one-half the time formerly consumed. This despite the new "load" added by the Withholding Tax.

▲ THE REASON—a new payroll plan by Shaw-Walker automatically transfers each figure to the several essential records.

After writing payroll figures just once, every record needed is completed, correct and up-to-date—ready for quarterly reports and government inspection. Rewriting of figures is entirely eliminated.

Entirely eliminated, too, are separate records for War Bonds, Social Security, Withholding Tax, employee insurance, employee hospitalization, union dues and all other ledger records of a similar nature.

Every pay day the statement you give to each employee includes:

(1) A complete record of earnings.

(2) A detailed list of deductions.

(3) A notice telling the worker the exact amount he has on deposit with you toward his next War Bond.

ALL MADE AT ONE WRITING: pay checks, employee pay statement, social security and withholding tax record, War Bond Record, ledger record of other deductions, check register and payroll summary.

▲ SO SIMPLE is the "KOPI-SPOT" payroll system that any clerk can handle it. It can be adapted to any type of payroll whether you pay by check or in cash—whether you make your entries by typewriter or by hand.

▲ A COMPLETE FOLDER has been prepared, illustrating the "KOPI-SPOT" and explaining its application to various payroll methods. May we send you a copy of it?

FOR THE DURATION any old file will do—it's the system itself that counts!

AFTER THE WAR transfer the system intact to any of the following:

A SHAW-WALKER FILING CABINET—the file that's "Built Like a Skyscraper." Result of 40 years of Shaw-Walker experience.

OR THE DRAWERS of the Shaw-Walker steel desk. This is the famous new low desk for comfort and hard work.

PICTURE OF A POST-WAR MIRACLE

A new, lasting armor for metal that will protect America against a billion-dollar thief!

YEAR after year, rust has "picked America's pocket" of a billion dollars annually! For example—before the war, thousands of garbage cans had to be discarded every day, and replaced because rust had made them useless.

After the war, the miracle of Corronizing will prolong the life of an ordinary garbage can as much as four times, giving you four times as much service for your money!

The same will be true of window screens and automobile parts, of motor trucks and milk pails, of wire fence, rainspouts, farm equipment—scores of things exposed to the ravages of rust! Already thoroughly tested and proved, Corronizing awaits only Victory to affect your life in hundreds of ways every day!

This entirely new, simple, inexpensive method of protecting metal was developed through years of research in the laboratories of the Standard Steel Spring Company.

For the present, Corronizing must wait—while Standard Steel makes armor plate, bombs and other vitally needed instruments of war. But when peace returns, it will pay you to look for the "Corronized" label before you buy. It will be your assurance of longer life and more for your money in the "wonder products" Victory is sure to bring!

Col. Joseph M. Heller Dies; Doctor in Two U. S. Wars

Col. Joseph M. Heller, 71, retired Army officer who has been surgeon general of the Military Order of the World War since 1938, died yesterday afternoon at the Naval Hospital after an illness of several weeks. His home here was at 1028 Connecticut ave. nw.

COL. HELLER

Born in Staunton, Va., January 29, 1872, Colonel Heller was the son of the late Jonas and Pauline Frank Heller. After attending public schools in Washington, he received his medical degree from Georgetown University and completed postgraduate work in the New York Polyclinic Hospital and Medical School.

In 1896, he became resident physician at Garfield Hospital here. He also served on the staff of Georgetown University Medical School the next year. Four days before war was declared on Spain in 1898, he was appointed an acting assistant surgeon of the United States Army. He served in this country as post surgeon at Fort Washington, Md., and was later surgeon and assistant executive officer at the base hospital at Camp Wikoff, Long Island. He was awarded the Silver Star citation for distinguished service on the field of battle in the Philippines in December, 1899.

After a visit to China and Japan to study tropical diseases, Colonel Heller returned to this country and was ordered as assistant surgeon to Governors Island, N. Y., in 1901. At that time he was commissioned a major and surgeon of the United States Army and at 28 was the youngest officer in the Medical Corps to hold that rank. He was commended by President William Howard Taft, then Governor of the Philippines, for service in maintaining a successful quarantine during the Philippine cholera epidemic in 1902.

Colonel Heller began private medical practice in Washington in 1903, specializing in internal medicine. He was professor of tropical medicine at George Washington University from 1904 to 1914. In 1917, he was commissioned major and surgeon in the United States Army for service in the World War.

He served subsequently at Camp Travis, Tex.; General Hospital No. 3 at Hot Springs, N. C.; Fort Riley, Kans., and in 1919 became commanding officer of the Army General Hospital at Philadelphia.

He was promoted to lieutenant colonel in the Army in 1918 and became a colonel in 1922. Colonel Heller is a member of numerous medical societies and has served as surgeon general of the Military Order of the World War since 1938. He was surgeon general of the Military Order of Foreign Wars from 1917 to 1923 and has been national secretary of the Order of the Carabao since 1910. He has been on the board of the American Legion for six years.

Surviving are his widow, Mrs. Renee Manning Heller of Washington, and his sister, Mrs. Carrie Wolfermann of New York City.

Republic Thunderbolt Dives at Estimated 840 m. p. h.

"Possibly the highest speed ever attained by man, believed by intelligence officers here to have been 840 miles an hour, was achieved yesterday over Emden, Germany, by the young American pilot of a Thunderbolt fighter...they said an Army Air Forces officer had exceeded the record of 780 miles per hour made last spring by a test pilot in another P-47...when the pilot returned...the plane was inspected for damage. It was found the paint had been peeled from the ailerons by the terrific wind that his speed had created. The plane showed no structural strain."

'U. S. Aides'

'Date' Club For Girls Goes to War

The Eight Girls to Every Man Club has gone to war.

Now sponsored by the District War Hospitality Committee, the club has changed its name to U. S. Aides, and its members, besides entertaining Uncle Sam's uniformed nephews, devotes time to the old gentleman himself, helping him with his home-front war effort.

The original organization was formed in April for the unabashed purpose of securing dates for Government girls who found themselves all alone with a telephone that rang only for wrong numbers.

Then, too, the girls felt that under many a military tunic there beat a lonely heart. "After all," they reasoned, "the poor boys can't dance with the top sergeant."

Came Casualty Lists

For a time everything went smoothly, with the papers carrying such headlines as "8-Girls-to-Man Club Greets 13 Marines" and "Government Girls Launch Social Program Tonight."

But then came the lengthening casualty lists from North Africa, Southwest Pacific, Sicily and Italy bringing to the girls the realization that helping with the war meant more than dancing about with servicemen.

It meant that there was hard work to do here on the homefront. Hard, gruelling, often monotonous, work that required neither an evening gown or a peaches and cream complexion.

Volunteer Tasks

And so the club—now numbering about 40 members—decided to lend their talents to any sort of volunteer tasks the war hospitality committee might provide.

Not that they have given up dancing and other forms of entertainment—part of their new duties will be to act as hostesses at various committee entertainments—but it is no longer the major part of their contribution. The Eight Girls to Every Man Club is in the war to win.

Goal Attained, Insurance Firm Celebrates

Harris & Ewing

The Acacia Mutual Life Insurance Co. has passed its goal of 500 million dollars of insurance in force, it was announced yesterday at ceremonies at the company's building overlooking the Capitol.

With the formal notification that the goal, pledged three years ago, had been reached, an old-fashioned hand bell, part of the archives of the company, was rung. The entire home office force of more than 500 employes, and field men from neighboring States preceded to the front of the building.

There, William Montgomery, president of the company and its directing head for 50 years, appeared on the front steps to address the throng of employes.

"So deep is my appreciation of this accomplishment by the men and women of Acacia that I find it difficult to express it in words," he said. "I can only say that this day alone is ample repayment to me for all of the energy and effort and thought which we have poured into the past 50 years of building this company.

"Acacia looks upon the attainment of 500 million dollars of insurance as an inspiration to make this company ever more useful to our community and our Nation. That is a trust we have cherished always. Now our responsibility is even greater; and so, likewise, are our opportunities."

Following the notification ceremony, an informal luncheon was given Montgomery at the Mayflower Hotel by the field force, represented by leading producers, with officers and department heads present.

Montgomery began his career with Acacia in 1893, when it had virtually no assets and occupied a single room over a downtown hat store.

62,344 Parcels for Services Abroad

Santa Claus' Christmas bag is already bulging with 62,344 parcels mailed by District residents to men fighting in distant parts of the world, Vincent Burke, District postmaster, disclosed yesterday.

But despite the fact that this enormous volume of presents is much greater than for the corresponding period last year, it is below the number expected by postal authorities. They predicted with a sigh that late mailers will wait until the last day—Friday for Army gifts—and thereby face the trials of long lines and congestion.

The deadline for posting gifts to Navy men is November 1 but officials will welcome all parcels as soon as possible and guarantee a much better chance for delivery before Christmas to early mailers.

Postmaster Burke said that the 62,344 packages were mailed between September 15 and last Saturday. The largest daily volume, totaling 7100, was on the latter day.

"We have had to return a number of presents because of incomplete addresses, rank, serial number, and unit of the men," Burke said.

He advised against sending foodstuffs of any type because the Army and Navy provide well for the men in this respect, but added: "If you must send sweets, buy hard candy. And don't send liquids." Foodstuffs must be wrapped securely in airtight containers if people persist in sending them. The possibility of chocolates reaching their destination in edible condition was described as "very doubtful" because of the press of other gifts and the high temperature under which they must go in a ship.

Burke reminded that the weight of packages must not exceed 5 pounds, and warned that a package weighing as little as an ounce more will be returned. The parcel must not be over 15 inches in length or 36 inches in length and width combined.

A LARGE BALTIMORE SHIPYARD

No, these are not Russian or Polish war orphans. They are right here at home. Their father, who was an automobile mechanic, is in Europe now, repairing American tanks. Their mother is in a war plant. Every night they sit here and wait her homecoming—and dinner. Your dollars can support playgrounds, equipment and care for them through one of our local welfare agencies. Would you rather have a new evening gown?

A merchant seaman has been dragged back to life from an ocean of flaming oil. He has lost all of the little possessions that sailed with him. He is given warmth and comforts and strength to fulfil his desire to "ship" again by your dollars. Would you rather have bought a new radio?

DOLLARS can be cold and selfish things. Or they can be generous, compassionate and merciful.

Turn over the spending of some of your dollars to your heart. It will want to give twice what your logical mind intended to give, because your heart understands the mercy, the relief and the pleasure that these dollars bring.

Let your heart decide.

This Chinese baby didn't have much, but yesterday it did have a straw shelter, a crude cradle and two parents to care for it. A screaming Japanese bomb destroyed them all. Remember this soldier? You saw him on the USO posters last year. His smile comes straight from a USO clubhouse. One of the finest things civilians have done in this war is in building and supporting the USO. Boys come into the army from farms and cities—a little lonely—a little homesick. Plea Is Voiced To Let Carriers Build Reserves

By the Associated Press

John E. Benton, general solicitor of the National Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners, opposed yesterday legislation to amend railroad bankruptcy laws by making findings of the Interstate Commerce Commission subject to court review.

Benton argued that slashing the capitalization of weak-sister railroads now in the process of reorganization would aid these lines in setting up reserves to tide them over depression periods.

Opposes Hobbs Bill

Without such reserves, he told the House Judiciary Committee, the railroads would head right back to bankruptcy, or the ICC would be forced to inflict higher rates on "shippers who can't afford" the added burden in poor times.

Benton was opposing a bill by Representative Hobbs (Democrat) of Alabama, to amend Section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act by making ICC findings in capitalization of reorganized companies subject to court review.

The bill also provides that capitalization of the reorganized company "shall not be less than the capitalization existing on the date on which the debtor's petition to the court was filed . . . with such adjustment therein as may result from the issue or retirement of securities during the reorganization proceedings."

Must Reduce Capital

Benton's association, representing railroad and utility regulation bodies in 46 States, declared:

"It is essential in the public interest, that bankrupt railroads shall be reorganized with their capitalization properly related to the prospective earning capacity of such railroads, under rates which are reasonable, taking into account, among other factors, the value of transportation service rendered to shippers, and . . . that the bill . . . will operate to prevent such reorganizations."

Benton pointed to the ICC's 50 years of experience in handling railroad reorganizations, and said that to "remove the finality" of its decisions and make them subject to review by a court "ill equipped" to consider the facts in the cases, would have unfortunate results.

UAL to Launch Flying Box Cars

Chicago, Oct. 11 (AP).—Flying freight cars, an innovation in commercial airline service, will go into coast-to-coast operation for United Air Lines between New York, Chicago and California October 16, C. F. Graddick, director of United's air cargo department, said today.

"The new service not only will add materially in providing additional space for the record volume of wartime mail and express which United is moving between the East, Midwest and Pacific Coast but also will tend to open up additional space for essential passengers on other schedules," Graddick said.

He said the planes would carry approximately 3 tons of cargo as compared with an average of 1400 pounds carried on United's combination passenger-cargo main liners.

Anti-Trust Case Seen Fire Insurance Threat

Pittsburgh, Oct. 11 (AP).—John M. Thomas, National Board of Fire Underwriters president, said today that the fire insurance business faces demoralization if State regulation of the business is nullified by application of Federal antitrust laws.

In a speech prepared for the forty-eighth annual meeting of the National Association of Insurance Agents, he declared:

"State regulation has been accepted by the courts, all branches of the insurance business and the public as the proper and most effective way of protecting policyholders and the public interest in insurance.

". . . Utter chaos will result if the Federal antitrust laws are now held to apply to fire insurance."

Walworth Issue Planned

New York, Oct. 11 (AP).—Stockholders of Walworth Co., manufacturer of valves and fittings, will be asked to approve at a special meeting November 22 a new issue of 100,000 shares of 5 per cent convertible preferred stock, $50 par value, it was reported today.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, Oct. 11 (AP).—Although moderate mill buying gave the wheat market support at times today, final prices generally were lower on profit-taking, the possibility of increased marketings and a Department of Agriculture statement that less wheat than originally anticipated will be needed for industrial alcohol production.

Trading was light because of the holiday tomorrow, Columbus Day, and the October 1 Government crop report due after the close. The Government forecast a corn crop of 3,065,605,000 bushels against a September 1 estimate of 2,985,267,000 bushels. The upturn was about in line with trade expectations.

Oats and barley tended to follow wheat, but rye was independently strong on buying by commission houses with cash connections. At the close wheat was unchanged to ⅛ lower, December 1.52¾, May 1.52⅛; rye was ¼-⅜ cent higher, December 1.10⅛@1.10½; oats were ¼ lower to ¼ higher, and barley was unchanged to ⅛ lower.

High Test Gas Faces New Cut For Civilians

Autoists, already beaten down to a point where their cars are fast becoming liabilities rather than assets, are to suffer another "knock," and this in the curtailment of the production of high-test and premium gasolines.

Expensive and late-year cars, with their high-compression engines, produced for the most exclusive use of high-test quality gasoline, are to go without the fuel for which they were designed. And, according to engineers, such engines will knock and ping all over the country with resulting damage.

The cause of the coming dearth of high-test gasoline for civilian use is the order of the Petroleum Administrator for War, Harold Ickes, to West Coast refineries that they must cut their production of high-test gasoline to where it will not be more than 10 per cent of the entire civilian supply.

Medium Gas Also Affected

Also to be hit will be the users of medium-quality gasoline, for refineries have been told to reduce both the quantity and quality of this fuel.

All this was done in anticipation of enormously increased demands for military gasoline, which is either 100-octane, used for aviation, or 80-octane, a general purpose gasoline.

The result will be that cars will be hard to start this winter and even the smoothest motor will sound like a 1917 jalopy, industry spokesmen said.

Military Comes First

It was pointed out by a spokesman that the lead and chemicals now being used to improve high-test gasoline for civilian use must be diverted to manufacture of fuel needed in a greatly increased aerial warfare and to keep the jeeps and trucks rolling for our ground forces.

Industry experts said that in view of the order to the West Coast, similar action could easily and certainly be expected in the East.

New Method Adopted For Luggage Ceilings

By the Associated Press

The Office of Price Administration, describing price increases for certain types of luggage as unjustifiable, yesterday announced a method of uniform price control for the industry.

Under the revision, effective next Saturday, manufacturers will be required to attach retail ceiling price tags to all luggage, giving the top legal price for each item. These ceilings will be based on a fixed mark-up over their own maximums.

Criminal Trial Set on Potato Price Charge

Charges of selling 67,500 pounds of white potatoes at prices above the OPA ceiling were placed in Municipal Court yesterday against Max Shapiro, produce wholesaler, at 1336 Fifth st. ne.

Shapiro pleaded innocent before Judge Walter J. Casey, who set jury trial for October 20.

Shapiro was charged with selling the potatoes in April and March to the United Food Stores Corp. of 1215 E st. sw., who operate 52 stores here. The potatoes were said to have been sold at between $4.40 and $5 for a 50-pound sack. The ceiling price on potatoes is $2.23.

John Laskey, chief attorney for the District OPA, said that the potatoes were represented to be sweet potatoes on which there is no price ceiling.

Laskey said that he learned of the alleged violations when two officials of the United Food Stores volunteered information on the transactions, which he said were made while the regular purchasing agent was not present.

This is the first case in which the OPA has preferred criminal charges against a wholesale produce dealer for price ceiling violations. Wholesalers have been sued civilly, however, in three instances here.

Washington Sailor Slain at Snell, Va.

The proprietor of a store-dancehall at Snell, Va., yesterday was held in the killing of Seaman Olen H. House, 23, a student at the Naval Gunnery School at the Washington Navy Yard. House is from Atlanta, Ga.

House was killed by a .22-caliber bullet which struck him in the forehead outside the dancehall Saturday night, and Sheriff M. L. Blaydes of Spotsylvania County said the proprietor, Vernon Williamson, claimed he shot the sailor to keep him from breaking in and molesting him.

OPA Reports D. C. Dealers Protect Sources

John L. Laskey, chief attorney for the District OPA, disclosed yesterday that enforcement of price-ceiling regulations is hindered by unwillingness of retailers to disclose the names of wholesalers who are jacking up prices here.

The statement was part of a summary released yesterday of the local OPA's work so far this year.

Laskey said retailers who were being squeezed by wholesalers engaging in black market practices were fearful that by disclosing information they would lose their sources of supply.

40 Laundries Under Fire

Laskey also said his office was preparing injunction suits against more than 10 laundries allegedly charging as much as 40 percent above legal ceiling.

The figures on enforcement for this year follow:

Fines for meat violations total $3250. In 12 potato cases, fines and forfeitures of $3250 were collected. In addition, in a treble-damage suit involving a potato dealer, $3,934.65 was awarded the OPA.

Bobby-Pin Settlement

Two out of court settlements involving the sale of onions totaled $727.82. One bobby-pin jobber settled for $1,186.20.

In seven gasoline cases fines of $975 were imposed, with jail sentences in five cases of from 90 days to a year.

In a case involving the sale of a wrist watch, a settlement was made for $250.

Operation of 18 gas stations was suspended for periods ranging from 10 days to a year and 9 months.

Pending are 11 injunction suits involving restaurants, three administrative civil damage actions, and one license suspension case.

Two indictments involving meat packers are awaiting disposition.

Since May 29, 1782 complaints have been filed by consumers against retailers.

Va. High Court Affirms Award To Judge Hedrick

The Supreme Court of Virginia yesterday affirmed a decision of the Arlington County Circuit Court awarding Judge B. M. Hedrick $3000 damages against the Jefferson Standard Life Insurance Co.

The suit arose several years ago when Judge Hedrick of the Arlington County Police Court applied for a real estate loan from the insurance company. He later charged in court that the company's agent misrepresented to him that the application had been filed. Judge Hedrick charged that because of the delay in obtaining the loan, the rising cost of building materials had caused him to lose money.

Extricate The Wrench

It is a safe assumption that if every member of Congress inspected Washington's slums, as did Senators Burton and Capper last week, the National Capital Housing Authority would be authorized to plan a new housing program in short order. The District has some of the foulest living quarters of any city in the United States. There is no hope of wiping them out, except through resumption of the NCHA's work that was interrupted by the war. In our opinion new projects should be planned now and the work should go forward again as soon as the slackening of war construction makes materials and manpower available.

A bill drafted at the request of Chairman Randolph of the House District Committee, giving the NCHA a new revolving fund, is now before the Budget Bureau. We hope that it will soon be forwarded to Capitol Hill with the full support of the Administration. Something more than an appropriation is needed, however, to enable the NCHA to resume its work on the hopeful basis that was laid down in Title I of the District's original Slum Clearance Act. The fact is that Senator McKellar threw a monkey wrench into the machinery of the NCHA last year and it will have to be removed if self-sustaining housing projects are once more to be built.

This monkey wrench was really intended for the TVA. Senator McKellar wanted to prevent TVA from using the revenues it collects and thus make it dependent upon Congress for every cent that it spends. NCHA was chosen as a sort of sacrificial victim to smooth the way for wider application of the Senator's technique. But Congress rejected the McKellar scheme as to TVA when a controversy over it was raised in the House. The blow fell only upon the NCHA. That agency can no longer spend the rentals it collects from houses built under Title I for management and repair of those houses. It has a meager $12,000 appropriation for that purpose—a sum so small that its properties are falling into disrepair.

NCHA is a governmental enterprise. Its business is destruction of slums and erection of new living quarters for low-income families. It has already gone a long way toward demonstrating that revenues from its moderate rentals will repay all costs of construction, maintenance and management, plus 3 per cent interest, over a period of 60 years. But to make its properties self-liquidating it must obviously have the right to use revenue from them for maintenance and repairs. So, in addition to approving additional funds for the NCHA, legislators working on this problem face the necessity of extricating Senator McKellar's monkey wrench and tossing it back to him.

Across The Dnieper

The incredible Russians have done it again. In view of the speed and extent of their advance since last July, when they halted the German offensive and began an offensive of their own, it would have caused no surprise had they taken some time out, after reaching the Dnieper, to consolidate their gains. It is evident that the Germans expected them to do so. But the Russian halt lasted only a few days. Then the advance began, an advance that has brought the Red army across the Dnieper at three points. The capture of Nevel has brought them astride Germany's last north-south railroad in Russia and now threatens to isolate the German forces in the Crimea and southern Ukraine.

The Russians today are, in fact, playing for the most grandiose stakes of the war. For two years it was the evident strategy of the Wehrmacht to divide the Red army into isolated bits and then smash one bit after another. The shoe is today on the other foot. With the loss of Nevel, the German forces south of Leningrad are now cut off, at least by the most direct route, from the German forces in the center and south. At the same time the assault of the Red forces that have established a bridgehead across the Dnieper south of Kremenchug is developing real momentum. Entire divisions are reported moving across the river with the Black Sea as the goal of the drive.

It is evident that the Germans on the Eastern Front are not going to be allowed any breathing spell this fall and that the Dnieper defense line which they hoped to hold during the period of the rains and make into an effective barrier is proving to be a snare and a delusion. But should the Germans be forced to begin a new large-scale retreat, there appears to be no point east of Poland where a defensible line could be established. The possibilities of a major disaster for the Reich may thus be in the making in Russia right now.

Allied News Policy

Prime Minister Winston Churchill enjoys the affection of American newsmen in a measure rivalled perhaps by no other public personality. But even Mr. Churchill, in his familiar and effective role as a reporter, cannot scoop the American press with impunity. The revelations contained in his recent address before the House of Commons occasioned a good deal of consternation among members of the newspaper fraternity over here, for they, on grounds of military security, had been denied the very information he so candidly and freely divulged. It is salutary, therefore, that our own Director of War Information, Elmer Davis, is pressing for adoption of a comprehensive Anglo-American news policy which will apply a common security formula on both sides of the Atlantic.

Admitting that the annoyance of American newsmen was justifiable, Mr. Davis observed: "Mr. Churchill is head of the British government and can overrule his own security officers. Moreover, he is an old reporter and a good reporter, and once in a while he can't resist the temptation to give himself a few exclusives." Perhaps this is just another way of saying that Mr. Churchill believes in taking the public into his confidence as much as possible. The scoops he scored could have been achieved by President Roosevelt over here. For the President, when he wants to be, is a good reporter, too. And he is just as capable as the Prime Minister of overruling his own security officers.

It has not been demonstrated that the enemy gained anything in the way of aid or comfort from Mr. Churchill's disclosures. These served merely to give the people of Britain and the United States a more intimate and vivid account than had previously been available of past events, the invasion of Italy in particular. Certainly it could have been no secret to the German high command that its U-boats had failed to sink a single Allied merchant ship in the North Atlantic during the four preceding months. Additional overruling of British and American security officers on matters of this sort seems entirely in order.

If we are to have an Allied news policy with a common security formula, let us hope that its purpose will not be to clamp down on the British Prime Minister. It can much more usefully be directed toward easing security restrictions. Mr. Roosevelt can help in this by doing some overruling on his own account. As a matter of local pride we should be glad to see a few exclusive stories from the White House. But we are less concerned with the source of the news than with its speed, candor and reliability. Mr. Churchill has set us a very stimulating example.

Siberian Bases

It is a pity that the five returning solons did not practice what they preached in the matter of teamwork. There seems to be a cleavage even as to what our military chieftains said to them about Russia's Siberian bases. Senator Lodge reported on virtually unanimous military authority in the Pacific that a million American casualties might be averted if Russia lend-leased them to the United States. Nothing of the kind, however, seems to have been heard by Senator Brewster. Indeed, the latter blames his colleague for not heeding General Marshall's counsel not to repeat any such nonsense. Evidently the latter, with an eye on the approaching Moscow parley, had pleaded for senatorial restraint in any references to Siberia, though why Russia should take umbrage over the Lodge statement, in view of the freedom of Russian comments about our strategy, we are at a loss to imagine.

Be this as it may, the Lodge statement was calculated only to hit the headlines. No man in his senses can estimate the number of casualties, if any, that might be saved by a cession of Siberian bases. There are far too many imponderables involved to permit any kind of calculation. Are we in a position as yet to use any of those bases except those in the Kamchatka Peninsula? Certainly there could be no decisive intervention on America's part which could offset the immediate course of events. What would then happen? Of course, Japan would declare war on Russia, and if Japan had a walkover in Siberia, as the military strategists believe would be the case, then she would be that much more of a nut to crack for the United States. Moreover, a second front for Russia in the Far East might imperil her first front against Hitler. In that event the offensive against Nazi Germany might be slowed down, so that more American lives might have to be sacrificed in the war in Europe. All these problems put this particular statement on the Siberian bases in the wacky class.

Still the raising of the general question of the Siberian bases is as much in order as is the raising of the problem of the second front by the Russians. It will always be the hope of this country that one of these days Russia will become associated in the war on Japan. It is the lack of such association that prevents the war effort of our two countries from becoming truly combined. Such a combination has been achieved with the British, and it is the foundation of a community of mind on the problems of the peace as well as of the war. Perhaps, when the German army has been defeated on the Eastern Front, and when our positions in the Pacific have been further advanced toward Japan, then Stalin might decide to take risks in the Far East which would align him with this country. Doubtless the parley in Moscow will explore that possibility.

Thwarting Child Care

Representative Mary Norton has planted a booby trap in the path of the effective child-care program formulated in the Thomas bill, S. 1130, which was passed by the Senate last June. In an evident attempt to forestall House passage of the Thomas bill, she has introduced an amendment to the Lanham Act which would empower the Federal Works Administrator to "establish and operate" child-care centers. The effect of this proposal would be to place in the hands of a construction agency the entire management of an essential program for the day care of the children of working mothers.

The FWA has already abundantly demonstrated its incapacity to handle a program of this sort. Using Lanham Act funds, it built a number of child-care centers in various parts of the country. But just recently its director, Maj. Gen. Philip B. Fleming, admitted in a letter to Representative Lanham that these were operating at less than one-fourth of their total capacity. He attributed this condition in part to improper location of the centers and to a reluctance on the part of mothers to take jobs and avail themselves of the child care which the centers could afford. These are shortcomings inescapably inherent in Federal operation of such a program. Were he possessed of the wisdom of Solomon and all the sages, no Federal administrator could cope with the myriad different local needs and problems entailed in the proper day care of children. Nor are nursery schools the whole answer to the problems of working mothers.

Their problems can be effectively met only at the community level. Centers must be located where the individual communities want them. They must be supplemented by foster homes and a counseling service for mothers. The type of care provided must conform to local habits and desires. And the operation of the centers must be accompanied by a vigorous program of education to teach mothers that they are not charity institutions but genuine cooperative enterprises similar in character to our public schools. As a matter of elementary common sense, this is not a job for which the FWA is in any way equipped.

Under the Thomas bill, the task of Federal supervision in connection with child care would be lodged, sensibly, in the Office of Education and the Children's Bureau. These agencies would allocate funds to the States. The actual planning and execution of the child-care program would be in the hands of State agencies in cooperation with local authorities and nongovernmental welfare associations. Most of the outstanding national organizations concerned with child care have already given their enthusiastic indorsement to the Thomas bill. Forty-two States have already formulated unified child-care programs and are ready to put local plans into action as soon as the measure becomes law.

In view of these facts, Mrs. Norton's eleventh-hour counterproposal can be regarded only as a device to enhance the power of the FWA in the incessant rivalry among Federal agencies for areas of control. Considering Mrs. Norton's otherwise good record, particularly in all matters relating to child labor, it is astonishing that she should have lent her name to such a stratagem. Her proposed amendment to the Lanham Act has been referred to the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds—a good indication of its irrelevance to the care of children. The Thomas bill is in the hands of the Committee on Education. We hope that this committee will report it to the House promptly and favorably and that the House will enact it without further delay. The comprehensive program embraced by it is an urgently needed war measure.

IT WAS THE WIND

Once I heard trees with a deep sound,
The moving of an air
That hurled its form on bending limbs,
And told me to beware
Of cataracts that burst in foam
Upon the pinetops there.

The pines were singing loud enough;
The hills without a sound
Were watching light fall in the west.
A failing sun had drowned
All lovely moments, color, trees
That filled the air around.

Now years apart from that still time,
I see once more impressed
Another land, retreating light,
And rude, curved pines addressed:
The sun with a soft shock eased down
Into the silent west.

And in my memory I heard more
Than hills or clouds could bring;
For somewhere time far out of mind
A bell began to ring.
The sky, the pines were touched again
By that wind's thundering.

Curtin's Challenge

By Michael Carter

Empire Council

THE TREND to ever-increasing independence for the Dominions within the British Commonwealth has been accelerated by an empire council proposal advanced by the Australian Prime Minister. On August 14, and again last week, Mr. Curtin suggested that a supreme consultative body be set up to deal with empire problems, and to join the other Allied Nations in postwar reconstruction.

Speaking in Canberra, Mr. Curtin said that "a gratifying and encouraging interest has been shown, particularly in Great Britain, in the proposal I put forward for a new approach to empire government after the war. Machinery to give effect to what I am sure will be recognized as an inevitable postwar development would appear to be easy to devise. There is ample evidence of the ability of Britain and the Dominions to collaborate on matters of policy in war. Surely, when the pressing problems of peace are to be met, the same collaboration can be achieved.

"I visualize a council with a structure similar to the present Pacific War Council, on which representatives of the Dominions would consult regularly with British government representatives.

Permanent Body

"The empire council should be a permanent body and its meetings should be held regularly. Because of everything that is inherent in Dominion status, I consider that meetings should be held on occasion in Canberra, Ottawa, Pretoria and Wellington, as well as in London.

"The empire council should have a permanent secretariat of men as expert in the problems of peace as those who, expert in war, are advising the councils of the empire and the United States today. The place Australia will occupy in the Pacific after the war can never be the same as it was up to 1939. She must have available the advantages of concerted empire policy if she is to be a power to stand for democracy in the South Pacific."

Coming at a time when Mr. Curtin has won an overwhelming political victory in his Dominion, this proposal is one of the most statesmanlike challenges that has ever come from any Dominion leader. It represents a new kind of pressure which will continue to be put on Whitehall. A similar challenge was uttered a few weeks ago by Brooke Claxton, Parliamentary Secretary to Canadian Prime Minister Mackenzie King, when he enunciated the basis for a new and more radically independent foreign policy for Canada.

Especial attention should be given to Mr. Curtin's statement concerning Australia's role in the Pacific. In declaring that "after the war (it) can never be the same as up to 1939," Mr. Curtin is informing the British and American Governments that Australia cannot be shoved aside when the big push begins in the Far East. Dr. Herbert V. Evatt, the Australian Minister for External Affairs, made it clear on both his missions to the U. S. and Britain in 1942 and 1943 that not only was the South Pacific front considered secondary by the Anglo-American strategists but that Australia's role, through lack either of concern or intelligence, was being de-emphasized.

Sector's Importance

Now that the importance of that sector is recognized, Australia has no desire to be pushed out of the picture. By stating that Australia must have available the "advantages of concerted empire policy if she is to be a power to stand for democracy in the South Pacific," Curtin is also saying, in effect, that the whole empire should recognize the importance of Australia's role in enforcing a policy which must embrace in its orbit the Netherlands East Indies and French Indo-China. And also that if differences of policy should emerge between Australia and Britain that Australia's will should prevail if the other Dominions support her.

Mr. Curtin's principles have been roundly supported in Australia, and have been given a great deal of attention in Great Britain.

In Australia itself the plan has been well received for the reasons that: (1) the plan will enable Australia to make herself heard in the administration of the three-power body obviously envisaged by Mr. Churchill. Through such a council, Australia would have the opportunity to put her case on issues where Australian interests in Asia might conflict with the interests of the great power; (2) the empire bloc needs to achieve something more comprehensive and more palatable to other nations than the Ottawa agreements; (3) while Britain may continue to be the heart of the empire, it should not be the sole repository of the empire's mind and will. All sections of the empire would want fuller influence in shaping relations with the rest of the world; (4) united empire policy fashioned under the guidance of a thoroughly representative empire council would seem the soundest possible basic for collaboration with the United States and other fighting democracies in restoring world trade and establishing international security against future war; (5) the war has widened Australia's horizon, and Mr. Curtin has given expression to this outlook.

Bombing Crescendo

By Barnet Nover

Softening Up The Reich

THIRTY FLYING FORTRESSES and two Thunderbolt fighters were lost in Sunday's raid by the United States Eighth Air Force on the German industrial and railroad centers of Muenster and Coesfeld and the Nazi-held airfield at Enchade in the Netherlands.

Twenty-nine American heavy bombers failed to return from the raids on Danzig, Gdynia, Marienburg and Anklam the previous day. Thirty bombers and three of our fighters were lost in last Thursday's heavy daylight raid on Bremen.

Thus in three days our losses amounted to 89 heavy bombers and 4 fighters and close to 900 trained pilots, bombardiers and gunners. Nor do these figures take into account the damage that was done to planes that returned, the dead and wounded these planes brought back with them.

THESE LOSSES are not to be minimized.

They make it clear that the process of softening up the Reich is, at this stage, proving costly. They also suggest that despite the wide dispersal of the Luftwaffe, a dispersal made necessary by the growing range and power of Anglo-American air strength, Germany's ability to defend herself against air attacks shows no diminution.

Yet these losses by no means tell the whole story. The fact is, and it is a very important fact, that our daylight raiders got through to their targets, that they inflicted heavy damage on vital Nazi centers and that as an incidental but important result of these raids the Luftwaffe is seriously being whittled down.

In the Muenster-Coesfeld raid 102 enemy planes were shot down. And thus far in October, according to Lieut. Gen. Ira Eaker, the commander of the Eighth Air Force, 450 German fighters have been destroyed by us alone. Since Germany's fighter strength on all fronts is probably fewer than 5000 it is evident that her recent losses have been considerable and even, to some extent, irreplaceable.

WHAT WE ARE witnessing in the mounting air struggle over Germany is a race with time for gigantic stakes.

Germany's strategy today is, if necessary, to throw everything she has into the struggle against Anglo-American air power so that, regardless of her own losses, to make it so costly for the Eighth Air Force and the RAF to raid German centers that a slackening of the air offensive on the Reich will result.

Should they succeed in that effort, German industry would secure a breathing spell in which to redouble its efforts to build up the Luftwaffe and the Luftwaffe would win time in which to lick its wounds and develop new defensive weapons and methods.

But if the Germans fail to beat off Allied air power this time and, in the process of trying, suffer serious attrition both with respect to their war production and their air strength, Germany will sooner or later reach the point where she could no longer provide adequate defense for such widely scattered points as Bremen, Berlin, Hanover, Stuttgart, Friedrichshafen, Munich, Danzig, Gdynia, Brest and Enchade—all of which points have in the course of the present month been the targets of daylight or night raids by the Eighth Air Force and the RAF.

IN FACT, the basic struggle in this developing Battle of Germany, as was the basic struggle in the crucial Battle of Britain in 1940, is the one involving the relative air strength of the contending air forces.

In 1940 Germany lost the Battle of Britain because, despite the heavy damage done in London, Plymouth, Coventry, Bristol and many other British cities, the Royal Air Force was not knocked out of the air. The Germans admitted as much after September 15, 1940 when, because of the loss of 185 bombers on that one day, they shifted from daylight assaults to night attacks.

This time Germany, on the receiving end of heavy bombing raids, has to cope with a problem the British never had to face, namely, round-the-clock assaults covering an area very much greater than the area of the United Kingdom. This involves a far greater dispersal of defending aircraft than was the case in Great Britain in 1940.

In other words, the great initial advantage which Germany had in the early years of the war, that of a central position which was hard to get at with the targets widely dispersed, is now proving a disadvantage. The great force of the individual Anglo-American raids, the fact that they are being carried out around-the-clock, and that practically no point in Germany is now beyond the reach of Allied air power, all tend to stretch the Luftwaffe to the breaking point. But whether the Anglo-American force is now strong enough to continue taking such heavy losses as those recently suffered until the Luftwaffe is thoroughly smashed, is not yet clear.

The next weeks should tell the story.

Tax Program

I have read your editorial of October 8 commenting on my colloquy with Judge Vinson concerning the failure of the Treasury's tax program to reach the excess purchasing power which both he and the Treasury say must be siphoned off if we are to hold the line against inflation. I have also read the letter from one of your readers, published on the 9th, expressing disappointment over your editorial and taking issue with my own position.

It appears that the purpose behind my exchange with Judge Vinson has been misconstrued. I was not arguing for higher taxes on small incomes, but was simply attempting to point out that despite all its cry about inflationary purchasing power, the Treasury had failed to produce a tax program that would reach this purchasing power in the hands of those who enjoy it. Personally, I feel that the amount of the alleged inflationary "gap" has been considerably overstated. The Treasury, however, is in the position of holding up the bugaboo of inflation without doing much about minimizing it. This leads me to believe that its program is more political than anti-inflationary.

I wish to make it clear that I am not in favor of any drastic increase in income taxes in the lower brackets, as the above-mentioned letter suggests I should be. While the bulk of whatever inflationary purchasing power exists is in the hands of the lower income group, as the Treasury's own figures show, the fact is that it is not equally distributed among all persons within this group. Hence, any general increase in rates on small incomes would fall with too heavy an impact on those whose salaries and wages have not risen as a result of the war, or may have actually decreased, and yet at the same time this increase probably would take only a fraction of the increased income of those who have benefited most from the war.

The problem confronting the Ways and Means Committee is to reach those with surplus spending power without crucifying those who do not have it, and who are already overburdened with existing taxes. This cannot be done simply by decreasing income tax exemptions and increasing the rates.

Albania's Claims

I had not read the Greek Ambassador's letter to your paper when I saw the article, "Albania vs. Greece," by Charles C. Hart.

The name of General Ferrero, in charge of the Italian forces in Albania in 1917, is still fresh in our minds. Albania's independence was secured under a treaty with Italy in 1920; nor has the treaty of Tirana been forgotten in 1926 between Albania and Italy—a pact of mutual support and cooperation. When Albania was seized by Italy in 1939, the crown was immediately offered to King Victor Emmanuel by the Albanians themselves, when their King and Queen fled; and, as the Greek Ambassador states in his letter to the editor, "The Albanians did nothing to oppose Italian domination, nor even protest . . . Nor did they give any help to the Greeks during the Italian aggression, but, on the contrary, took an active part in the fighting on the side of the Italians."

How unkind to the part Greece has played and still plays in the present conflict! Greece, attacked by Italy and thoroughly crushed by Germany . . . " writes Mr. Hart, with satanic glee. Of course, Greece was attacked by Italy on October 29, 1939, and that little brave nation kept its powerful foe in awe, and at a standstill for six months, taking tens of thousands of prisoners, so that in Salonika there were more Italian prisoners than inhabitants. History will record for future generations the part Greece played in delaying Hitler's attack on Russia, giving the Soviets time to prepare. This was the beginning of the present Axis debacle in the Eastern Front.

The American people will never forget that it was Greece who first defeated the Axis on the battlefield and forced the German mighty war machine to poise for 10 weeks on the Bulgarian frontiers before deciding to strike. It was the Greeks who roused the flagging spirits of the Allied chieftains by her uncommon heroism. WILLIAM T. VISE.

Rotting Apples

Apples are selling for 11 cents a pound in Washington and for as low as 4 cents a pound in Virginia, and the War Food Administration has announced that this year's crop is a small one.

Sunday I was shocked to see miles of orchards in the Shenandoah Valley where apples lie rotting under the trees.

Couldn't the U. S. Employment Service or some of our civilian organizations or even our schools do something to save the thousands of bushels of apples going to waste for lack of pickers? S. H.

The Once Over

White House Press Conference, Play By Play

The newspaper correspondents don their iron helmets and rashly start for the press conference without an adequate barrage. The President has them at his mercy, but withholds his fire until he can see the whites of their eyes. (Two reporters who were on a bender the night before have no whites of their eyes and are excluded.)

A correspondent asks if the President wishes to say anything about a report that Fala, the White House pooch, has fleas. Mr. Roosevelt says it is questions like that that hamper the war effort. The correspondent says there was a piece in the paper that Fala had fleas. The President says he seldom reads the newspapers.

A reporter says Fala has been reported scratching a lot. The President says it probably originated with the Republican National Committee and the tory press. A reporter changes the subject and says he understands the winter season is about to set in on the Russian front, and they may have snow there any day. The President says there has been nothing official decided about winter on the Russian front and the press is pretty impertinent bringing up the matter.

A correspondent says it is darned funny how we in this country are always late in getting the news on Russian winters, but that the English always get it through Churchill on time. The President says there has been too much whispering about Russian winter. He adds, "A lot of editors trust to gossip and loose talk on the snow situation in Russia, but the people are not fooled."

Mark Sullivan, seeing that this line is not getting anybody anywhere, sidetracks it and asks if the President cares to comment on the report that the bicycle is coming back. The President says he hasn't had time to read about it.

Mr. Clapper says there is a rumor that Marshal Badoglio is really Fiorello LaGuardia, and that the man posing as Mayor of New York is Jimmy Savo. The President says that is the sort of question that helps the enemy on all fronts.

David Lawrence says he understands, but not from OWI, that Naples has fallen. The President says this is an "iffy question," in line with those attempts of the tory publisher to get him to tell where General MacArthur is.

A couple of correspondents ask if the President has anything to say about Wendell Willkie's last speech. Mr. Roosevelt replies that there never will be such a thing as Mr. Willkie's last speech, more's the pity.

An editor who came in on a wing and a pair asks if Mr. Roosevelt thinks the American press has its good impulses in rare moments. The President tells him to put on the dunce cap and sit in a corner.

The conference adjourns. No hits, no runs, considerable asperity.

Prayer

There's a blue star in my window.
Pillowed on a field of white;
It's a tribute to a soldier
On the battle front tonight.
Just one star among a cluster,
Yet it soothes my anxious fear
As I pray it keeps its luster
'Til the dawn of peace appears.

There's a blue star in my window
That God plucked from out the sky;
Then He showered it with glory
As he sent it down from high.
May His blessings be extended
Thru the faith to which I hold
As I pray this strife be ended
Ere my blue star turns to gold.
—Arthur Valentine Walker.

We expect to hear any day now of the football star who was caught with his "punts" down.

"Americans Urged to Eat Less Meat." Headline. It's being taken care of, mister.

Washington is opposed to a sales tax and a national lottery. It would make it all too simple. And besides, it would relieve the tax burden.

Paper Salvage

The letter, "Wasteful Residents," by M. L. C., appearing in The Post, has come to the attention of the D. C. Salvage Committee.

At the present time, this committee is conducting an intensified paper salvage program throughout this area. Home owners, industries and business establishments are being called on to save their paper for collection. Every effort is being made to bring to the consciousness of our citizens the terrific need for these materials in order that supplies reaching our Allies and our armed forces may not be impaired.

The program has been set up in a very simple manner. The householder merely saves newspapers, magazines and corrugated paper boxes, ties them in bundles and places them on the front porch on the regular collection dates.

The success of the program will be measured only in the number of patriotic citizens who can and will take the time to assist in the program. Washington can be very proud of its salvage record. This record is made possible only by the individual's cooperation.

We believe in "SALVAGE FOR VICTORY."

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

Europe In The Japanese War

IN MAKING plans for our relations with the European continent immediately after the German defeat, we must not forget how many European nations will still be at war with Japan. The popular assumption, and to a considerable extent the official assumption, has been that liberated Europe will have to be relieved and rehabilitated out of the scant surplus resources of the United States and Great Britain while we are concentrating gigantic forces in the Pacific. But in fact the very nations which have the first claim to relief and rehabilitation are our allies in the Japanese war, and the fact that they are can be turned to their advantage and our own.

LIPPMANN

THE FIGHTING French, who are now the French, have been our allies against Japan since the day after Pearl Harbor. They will wish to wipe out the dishonor of the treachery of Vichy in surrendering Indo-China to Japan. The Netherlands is, of course, a very important Pacific power, and our ally since the first hour of the Japanese war. Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Yugoslavia are at war with Japan; Norway and Greece have broken relations with Japan.

All of them have the strongest reasons for proving in action their solidarity in the war against aggression, and each is capable of making a very substantial contribution. They have veteran fighting men, pilots, bombardiers, sailors, merchant crews, as brave and experienced as any anywhere. Some of them, particularly France, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, a reconstituted Poland, and we may add Austria, will have war industries which will in some considerable degree survive our bombing and the German devastation when the Germans retreat. Several of them are great seafaring nations, for example Norway, which in 1939 had a larger merchant fleet than Germany and very nearly as large a merchant fleet as Japan. Since the war in the Pacific is, as General Marshall has put it, "predominantly oceanic," the industrial and maritime power of liberated Europe is much too considerable to be overlooked.

WHEN THE fighting ends in Europe, the economy of Europe will be organized for war. That being the case, and in view of the fact that the liberated nations will be at war with Japan, are we right in the assumption that while we are fighting in the Pacific, we shall be practising philanthropy in Europe? Must we not start on the different assumption that with food and some raw materials and perhaps technical assistance, liberated Europe can play a positive role in the combined effort to conclude the World War?

If we do not take this view, we shall see the main industries of Europe shut down abruptly. For European industries are war industries, and they cannot successfully or properly be converted suddenly to civilian production while the great oceanic powers are still engaged in the deadly struggle with Japan. So unless we and our allies give them war contracts, we shall create the misery of vast unemployment in Europe while in Britain and America we are exhausting our supply of manpower. It ought not to be beyond our capacity to make arrangements by which we relieve the strain on our manpower in the act of relieving liberated Europe of hunger and unemployment.

THEN INSTEAD of demobilizing our European allies suddenly while Britain and America remain totally mobilized, instead of attempting abruptly to reconvert their economy while ours remains organized for total war, we can practise a division of labor and reciprocal aid which will relieve the strain everywhere.

The military and the economic advantages of such a policy are evident. The moral and political are no less important. Reciprocity is always better among nations than for one to be the giver and the other the receiver. Our friendship with Europe will prosper most if it rests upon a self-respecting give and take. Moreover, the continued and combined participation of the liberated nations in the common war will provide them with an objective, and perhaps unifying, national purpose during the spiritually trying times which will follow the collapse of the Nazi tyranny. They may by this means be carried over the dismal and blank moments when they have little to think about but their memories of the past and the difficulties of the future.

THE CONTINUING war with Japan will raise, of course, immensely important practical questions about the character of the German disarmament. We must think clearly and carefully about this question. We must ask ourselves what use we can and should seek to make of the immense war potential of Germany. Much of it will have been destroyed by bombing if the Germans prolong their now hopeless resistance. But Germany will still be, even at 50 per cent capacity, one of the greatest sources of military production in the world.

Moreover, as the naval and air authorities in London and Washington must be thinking, the German arsenal is in part specially designed for war against the island empire of Britain. Japan is also an island empire.

WHETHER WE can use any part of the German arsenal against Japan, and how this is to be done without mitigating the disarmament of Germany, is a question which can be decided only with the full consent of Soviet Russia. And it must be decided without seeking to prejudice Russia's indubitable right to decide for herself her future relations to the Japanese war.

We have to be extremely careful also to remember the deep and insidious pitfalls of an unconsidered policy of using German resources for the Pacific war. We must avoid, as we would the pest, any temptation to be bamboozled into treating some immediate post-Hitler German regime as a co-belligerent. If we can make any use of German war industry and German labor, it must be as reparation by an absolutely defeated enemy and not as a contribution to the common cause.

BUT WITHIN these limits we must ask ourselves whether and how we can exploit the defeat of Germany to accelerate the defeat of Japan.

Censors Scan Army Snapshots

By the Associated Press

London—Just about the most ardent bunch of amateur photographers in the world right now must be the American soldiers in Britain. They're shooting snapshots at the remorseless rate of 9000 a day.

It's possible to nail the number down exactly, because all the pictures have to go through a perspiring little knot of U. S. Army censors who have to make sure the G. I. lenses didn't take in any scenery helpful to the enemy.

All negatives go from the camera to the Army Pictorial Service in London, which develops them and makes one print of each picture, free, passing the results on through the long-suffering censors before the picture-snappers can send them home or do anything else with them.

The quartet of khaki-clad officers striving to dispose of this tide of photography reports that practically all of the pictures are the same thing—a guy against some scenery—and practically all are down to the usual amateur standard, which isn't so good.

The big mystery is where the boys get so much film, when it's so scarce. Apparently they brought a big supply with them.

Soldiers Cling To Souvenirs, Steinbeck Says

By John Steinbeck

Somewhere in the Mediterranean War Theater.—It is said, and with some truth, that while the Germans fight for world domination and the English for the defense of England, the Americans fight for souvenirs. This may not be the final end for our dogfaces, but it helps. It is estimated that two divisions of American troops could carry away the Great Pyramid, chip by chip, in 24 hours. This writer has seen pup tents piled nearly to the ridge rope with nearly valueless mementoes of places the soldiers occupied. Dark back rooms of houses in Algiers and Palermo and Messina, and by now probably Salerno, are roaring with the industry of making bits of colored cloth and celluloid into gadgets to sell to soldiers.

A soldier has been seen struggling down a street in Palermo carrying a 50-pound statuette of an angel in plaster of paris. It was painted blue and pink and had written on its base in gold paint, "Balcome too Palermo." How he ever expected to get it home no one will ever know. If the homes of America ever receive the souvenirs that are being collected by our troops there will be no room for living. The postoffice at an African station recently stopped a sentimental present a soldier was sending his wife. It was a prized possession and he had bought it from a Goum for 1000 francs. It was a quart jar of fingers pickled in brandy.

It is reported that the pre-Roman Greek temples at Salerno have suffered more from chipping by American soldiers in two weeks than they did during the preceding 3000 years, and whereas they have suffered the destructive rage of invaders for centuries they are not expected to survive the admiring souvenir hunting of our troops, who only want to send a small chip home to the little woman.

Souvenir Hunting Has Rules

True souvenir hunting has its rules. It does not apply to the fighter group who transported a grand piano, piece by piece, over a thousand miles. Nor to the bomber swing band who rescued a crushed bull fiddle and mended it with airplane fix-it until it was four inches thick. They wanted to use these things. Souvenir hunting, if properly done, only takes notice of things that can't possibly be used for anything at all and are too big or too fragile ever to get home.

Probably the greatest souvenir hunter of this whole war is a private first class who must be nameless but is generally called Bugs.

Bugs, when the battle for Gela in Sicily had abated, was poking about among the ruins, when he came upon a mirror—but such a mirror as to amaze him. It had survived bombing and shellfire in some miraculous manner, a matter which created wonder in Bugs. The mirror was six feet two in height and four feet wide, and it was in a frame of carved and painted wood which represented hundreds of small cupids wrestling and writhing about a length of blue ribbon, which accidentally managed to cover every cupid from indecency. The whole thing must have weighed about seventy-five pounds and it was so beautiful that it broke Bugs' heart. He just couldn't leave it behind.

Bugs probably fought the toughest war in all Sicily, for he carried the mirror on his back the whole way. When the shellfire was bad, he turned his mirror face down and covered it with dirt. On advances he left it and always came back in the night and got it again, although it entailed marching twice as far as the rest of his outfit.

Entered Palermo in Triumph

Finally Bugs arranged a kind of sling, so that while advancing he had the appearance of a charging billboard. He gradually came to devote a good part of his life to the care, transportation and protection of the biggest souvenir in the whole Seventh Army. When he finally marched into Palermo he did so in triumph, for his mirror was unchipped and its frame was only a little chewed up from handling.

Now, for the first time, Bugs was billeted in a house, one of those tall houses with iron balconies and narrow stairs. Bugs tried in vain to get the mirror around a corner of the narrow stairway and finally he got a rope and, tying one end of it to the balcony, he went back to the street and tied the other end of it to his mirror. Then he went back and hauled it up to the second floor, where he was billeted. There he surveyed the room and decided where to hang his mirror. He drove a nail in the wall, hung the mirror and stepped back to admire it. And he had just stepped clear when the nail pulled out and the whole thing crashed and broke into a million pieces.

Bugs regarded the mess sadly, but then the great philosophy of the "blowed in the glass" souvenir hunter took possession of him. He said: "Oh, well, maybe it wouldn't have looked good in our flat, anyways."

Wartime Washington

By Merlo Pusey

Preparing Congress For Tasks Ahead

NOTHING is more evident in the whole field of Government today than the fact that Congress has jeopardized its future by failing to streamline its own organization. The very nature of the age in which we live has piled upon the House and Senate truly staggering burdens. Nor will the end of the war minimize this load of work and responsibility that must be carried by our chief policy-making agency. The business of finding our place in the world community will tax the ingenuity and statesmanship of every legislator as well as every executive official concerned with foreign policy. And in the field of domestic policy there will be the baffling problems of demobilization and reconversion of war industry, payment of our mountainous debts, and supervision over our complex economy with the object of providing full employment.

PUSEY

In one way or another these responsibilities of government must be met. If Congress fails to meet them expeditiously, the transfer of more power to the White House and the "bureaucrats" will be inevitable. From this viewpoint, the biggest long-range issue before Congress today is the modernization of its own habits and machinery to match its current obligations.

MANY far-sighted members of Congress are worried about the slowness of that body in adjusting its ways to the spirit and tempo of the present age. A few months ago Senator La Follette suggested a number of constructive reforms in committee organization, in collaboration between Congress and the Administration, and in the acquisition of expert legislative staffs. If Congress fails to be progressive in meeting its own internal problems, he concluded, "there is no telling how long an impatient people will support representative government in America."

On the House side Congressman Dirksen is pressing once more for a joint committe to keep the Senate, House and administrative agencies working together on postwar plans. Unless present methods can be improved, he has good reason to fear that the end of the war will find Congress wrestling with gigantic plans and policies about which it knows little or nothing.

Students of government outside of Congress are no less concerned. In his admirable new book entitled The Republic, Charles A. Beard points out that if Congress permits itself to become futile, through adherence to obsolete rules, poor organization and obsession with petty details, "we shall then be in danger of being ruled by the President alone as a sort of Caesar." The getting of more competence, efficiency and responsibility in our government, he says, is "the supreme constitutional issue in our troubled times."

THE QUESTION is not, of course, merely one of organization. It involves also the willingness of Congress to concentrate its efforts upon major policies. At present its calendar is sorb a large portion of its time, cluttered up by trivia that ab-Congress is still fumbling ponderously with claims against the Government instead of turning that task over to an expert agency which could dispose of such claims with both justice and dispatch. Unless Congress can cut itself loose from such picayune responsibilities, its great task of shaping the internal and external policies of the most powerful Nation on earth is certain to be neglected.

IT IS AT this point that the McCarran bill to give the District of Columbia a municipal government of its own comes into the picture. Senator McCarran's chief purpose in introducing the bill may have been to free the Capital City of the disgraceful conditions that direct congressional government has imposed upon it. That alone is a worthy objective. Equally important, however, is the cause of releasing our overburdened National Legislature from the time-consuming role of city council.

If there is any more ridiculous incongruity anywhere in the field of Government than the sight of two houses of Congress, composed of 531 members, wrangling over the control of boxing or the construction of a nurses' home in the District of Columbia, it has not come to my attention. Some months ago Senators were complaining that they didn't have time really to analyze the bills through which the Nation is spending a hundred billion dollars a year for war. Yet they continue to comb over the comparatively trifling expenditures for playgrounds, schools, streets and hospitals in the Capital. Such frittering away of congressional energy is even more serious from the national viewpoint than the hamstringing of local government in Washington.

Senator McCarran's bill ought to be given a place, therefore, among the best of the proposals to modernize the machinery of Congress. The bill does not go far enough in relieving Congress of its annoying burden as city council for the Capital. But it can be readily amended so that all the routine details of running the city government can be handled by an elected local government, with Congress reserving to itself only the enactment of general legislation affecting the city. The relationship might well be approximately that of a State Legislature to its own capital.

But in any event, Congress will have to shed the responsibility of a city council if it is to do justice to its national and international obligations. That step would be a good place to start the process of streamlining Congress to prepare it for the colossal obligations that are moving its way.

40 Parents Unite to Get News About Sons Reported Missing

By the Associated Press

Kansas City, Oct. 11.—Forty silent men and women—the parents of the missing—crowded into the little home of Mrs. Ralph Herrick, to share their sorrow and to search, together, for new hope.

Most of the women gripped tightly the worn and crumpled "missing in action" telegrams from the War Department—the messages that had lined a dull weariness into their faces.

Joint Appeal for News

Mrs. Herrick had called them together in the hope they might jointly appeal to the War Department for more information.

"We are living in the stillest silence," she said. "We only want the truth . . . we think a way can be found to tell us more. It's the waiting and not knowing that hurts . . . we are the forgotten mothers."

She listed 127 Kansas City boys about whom no additional official word has been received, and the meeting approved a suggestion the list be sent to Missouri's congressional delegation, to the Army and Navy, the Red Cross, and the SMCA.

Congressman Replies

[Expresing "deepest sympathy" with the 40 Missouri parents and saying he "extended that sympathy to all American parents," Representative John J. Cochran (Democrat) of St. Louis, Mo., last night declared here he believed it impossible for the military to give more details on missing, wounded or dead American soldiers than they now give.

["The Government is not censoring information, and no congressional prodding is necessary to make certain parents get all the information it is safe and possible to get to them about their sons," Cochran said. Overloaded communication facilities and national security militate against complete individual reports, which, he said, "all parents naturally would like to get."—Editor's Note.]

Mother Waited for Weeks

Mrs. Herrick said she waited weeks after her son, Sergt. Marion Boren, was reported missing last June 13 over German-occupied territory. Then at last she wrote to the Queen of England.

The Queen got action, Mrs. Herrick said. She exhibited a letter from Lieut. Gen. Jacob L. Devers, commanding general, European theater, which said her son's plane last was seen on its way back from a successful mission over enemy territory. Even that much helped, she told the little group.

The group elected officers, with Mrs. Herrick as president, and named a committee to issue appeals for news. Meetings will be held every two weeks.

Mrs. Herrick said she thought it would be nice if they prayed together for their boys.

Forty heads bent.

There was only an occasional sob.

House Committee Acts Today on Fathers' Bill

The House Military Committee, in executive session, today will put House finishing touches on the Senate-passed fathers' draft bill, tightening occupational deferments to speed induction of eligible nonfathers.

Lieut. Col. Francis V. Kessling, Selective Service liaison officer, was invited by Chairman Andrew J. May to sit in with the committee. May favors a House amendment more specifically requiring that all available nonfathers be called into service ahead of parents.

Paper Supply Faces Dark Outlook in '44

By the Associated Press

The rapidly diminishing supply of paper available for printing newspapers, and for other essential uses, was underscored yesterday in a series of statements and official reports.

The combined production and resources board and combined raw materials board received a report from one of its subcommittees which stated that unless adequate labor can be recruited in Ganada and the United States to cut pulpwood (from which paper is made), this country may have to get along in 1944 with 52 per cent less printing and wrapping paper than it had this year. This estimate was made despite drastic reductions already made in newsprint and wrapping paper use.

Woodcutters Needed

E. W. Tinker of the American Paper and Pulp Association, testified before the Boren House subcommittee that the paper industry "cannot keep going without some immediate remedial action."

"If it isn't done," he said, "the country is faced with a shortage of paper that will have a serious effect on the war effort and on our national economy. We are faced with shortages that will affect grades of paper which are absolutely essential to the carrying on of the war."

He echoed the need for more woodcutters, and recommended that ships, bound for Russia with lend-lease supplies, bring Russian wood back to this country for the paper mills.

The American Newspaper Publishers Association appealed for tariff act revisions to help meet the situation. American newspapers are now operating on greatly reduced printing paper supplies, and should any further reduction approximating 52 per cent be made effective, revolutionary changes would be required in the publications supplied to the public.

Grade Not Defined

The ANPA statement was presented to the Boren House Subcommittee investigating newsprint, by Cranston Williams, general manager for Linwood I. Noyes, president of ANPA. It said that the 1930 Tariff Act declared "standard newsprint paper" to be duty free, but failed to define newsprint.

"We call your attention to the facts which support our contention that it was the clearly expressed purpose of Congress to admit free of duty, under the term 'standard newsprint paper,' that kind of printing paper on which newspapers are printed," the statement said.

"Notwithstanding that fact, the Treasury Department, by a series of definitions and limitations defined 'standard newsprint paper' in such a manner that it has not permitted the importation of newsprint that varies from narrow and rigid standards. In essence, these restrictions mean that if newsprint is not made of certain components, in certain weights, in certain percentages and in certain widths of printing rolls, it cannot be admitted duty free.

"This has resulted in a practical closure to improvement in printing qualities, to the conservation of materials and, under present conditions, the ability of publishers to supply newspapers to the many thousands of citizens who are eager for information, education and entertainment."

Noyes' statement, asserting that 75 per cent of newsprint used here came from Canada, said Canadian newsprint producers had informed publishers that newsprint in lighter weight with material increase in the available printing area would be entirely practical, but the publishers "are debarred from this service by the heavy import duties and the consequent heavy financial obligation which falls upon the buyer."

Agencies' Heads Hold First Meeting On Demobilization

An initial meeting with agency heads to work out a "unified and comprehensive" program for the demobilization of servicemen at the end of the war was held yesterday by War Mobilization Director James F. Byrnes.

Additional meetings will be held to draft a report to President Roosevelt.

A spokesman for Byrnes stated that no announcement would be made by OWM, since the meeting was called at the suggestion of the President.

It is understood that officials of the armed services, the Veterans Administration, Selective Service, Federal Security Agency, War Manpower Commission, and Labor Department are assisting Byrnes to prepare the program.

Persecution Seen

Democrats Warn OPA Hurts Party

By the Associated Press

Two Western Democrats predicted yesterday a 1944 defeat for their party that "may reach the proportions of a revolution" unless, as they put it, the Office of Price Administration can be forced to "stop its persecution of honest citizens."

Senator Thomas (Democrat) of Oklahoma, an Appropriations Committee man, threatened to seek new restrictions on OPA spending as a means of "confining its activities to the duties authorized by Congress."

Applauding this course, Senator Johnson (Democrat) of Colorado, declared:

"People generally are sympathetic with the objective of holding down prices, but the unreasonableness of some of the OPA regulations are driving them mad.

Thomas Assails Bowles

Thomas complained that Chester Bowles, OPA general manager, ignored a letter he wrote September 24 telling of a need for changes to avoid "a revolt in the 1944 elections" and declared, "it now appears more drastic steps are necessary." He added:

"While the Appropriations Committee cannot legislate, it can restrict the use of funds it recommends for spending in such a way as to effect a repeal of illegal and obnoxious activities in which the OPA is engaging."

Thomas reiterated previous complaints that "orders have gone out from Washington" to agents in the field to "get something on some prominent citizen in each locality with a view to giving such cases maximum publicity."

"If this is the procedure by which they seek to obtain public compliance with OPA regulations, it is not the American way," he commented.

Senator Cites Cases

The OPA in Oklahoma frequently brings charges against prominent citizens "before making routine investigations, thereby subjecting innocent people to undesirable publicity," Thomas continued.

"A man wrote me from Fort Smith, Ark., that his father, now dead, was exonerated of a rent-control violation complaint that could have been withheld entirely by a simple check of the records.

"In my own State a prominent doctor was accused of driving his automobile into Colorado on a fishing trip when he hadn't been in Colorado for 20 years."

New Jersey's Republican Senators and House members told Bowles in a letter yesterday that they were ready to aid the OPA in securing the confidence of the people, but could not do so "unless a more intelligent and cooperative attitude is adopted by the OPA and its administrators."

The Senators and 11 Republican Representatives wrote Bowles that during the recent congressional recess they had had the opportunity to meet with farmers, dairymen, poultrymen, manufacturers, small businessmen and realtors, and the like, "and the unversal complaint is that the OPA imposes restrictions and regulations with little regard to the actual facts."

Civilian 'Gas' Quota in West Slashed 15%

By Edwin D. Gritz

Post Staff Writer

Civilian gasoline allotments in the Rocky Mountains and Pacific Coast were slashed by about 15 per cent yesterday as part of highly significant petroleum developments indicating extension of intensive efforts to meet increasing military needs out of decreasing inventories.

Petroleum Administrator Harold L. Ickes described the gasoline cut as the obvious action in the face of future military requirements. This was interpreted to mean that forthcoming Burma and Pacific offensives under Lord Louis Mountbatten and Gen. Douglas MacArthur are already rapidly drawing up attack power.

Ickes pointed out that 1942 military requirements for gasoline represented 23 per cent of the total consumption in the Far West. But today, mandatory demands have already increased to 43 per cent and next year, according to present estimates, they will be equivalent to 52 per cent of all the gasoline available in the Far West.

More Foreign Oil Used

"Foreign sources are being used to an ever greater degree," Ickes stressed, "but the military requirements that in the past have been met from the Pacific Coast supply are increasing so heavily that the effect of foreign oil will be only to make up the difference which will be impossible to furnish from domestic supplies."

While not elaborating on the foreign oil picture in yesterday's announcement, Ickes was said to have already accomplished a "considerable amount" of work as head of the Petroleum Reserve Corporation to increase the output and refinement of oil in the Near and Middle East.

Although the specific activity of the Petroleum Reserve Corporation has steadfastly been kept secret for military security reasons, Ickes is already operating in Abadan, Iran, which is only one of several choice petroleum areas in that section of the world from which Allied armed forces will get more gasoline and oil.

U. S. Experts in Middle East

Petroleum officials said that a good representation of American experts are already in the Middle East with the assignment to "get out the oil."

President Roosevelt recently disclosed that opening of the Mediterranean Sea to Allied shipping has made possible a rearrangement of world supply routes so that the British can contribute a fairer and larger share of petroleum from supplies in the Middle East for the war effort.

Petroleum experts in the Government have privately stated that nominal expansion of existing plants in the Middle East will appreciably step up production of high grade gasoline and lubricants.

On the Hill, meanwhile, Representative Poulson (Republican) of California urged investigation of a situation in which he said the Army-Navy Petroleum Board had spent nearly 100 million dollars for development of Imperial Oil Co. wells at Fort Norman, Canada, while a 35,000-square-mile naval petroleum reserve north of Nome, Alaska, remained unexploited.

Poulson pointed out that the oil production from the Canadian wells was not only inadequate, but the project was benefiting the Canadian company and Canada itself.

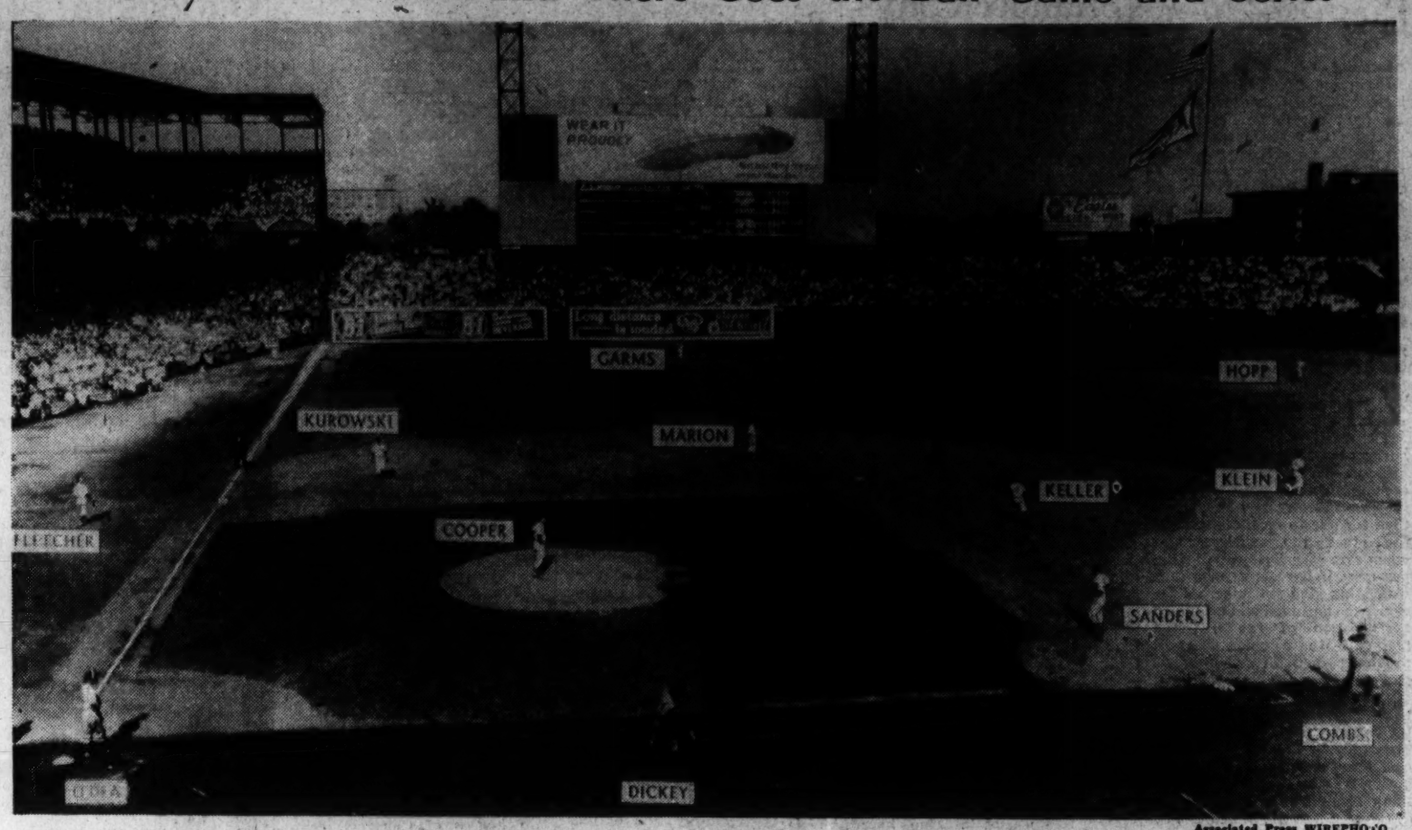
Yanks Jubilant (to Put It Mildly) Over Victory

Dickey Hits Homer—and There Goes the Ball Game and Series



Associated Press WIREPHOTO

With teammate Charlie Keller jogging ahead of him, Bill Dickey starts around bases on his homer that won fourth game for the Yanks, 2-0—and series

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

St. Louis, Oct. 11.—There were only two of 'em left, two of the old Yankees of the Ruth-Gehrig era, and what a whale of a help they turned out to be when these 1943 Yankees had to beat the Cardinals in this year's World Series, Bill Dickey and Frank Crosetti, we mean.

POVICH

Sure, Spud Chandler won two games, and Hank Borowy and Marius Russo also turned in a swell pitching job each, but the two ancients from a more powerful Yankee dynasty did a job on the Cardinals throughout the series.

The story of what Dickey did is still fresh and exciting and headline stuff. He merely wrapped up the series with that home-run blast onto the right-field roof for the two runs that beat Morton Cooper. But you had to see the series to appreciate Crosetti's contributions. Figures can't tell what he did.

Crosetti didn't hit any home runs in fact, he made only five hits in the series, he batted in only one run for the Yankees, but that run won a ball game, the fourth. Crosetti would have been a Yankee hero if he hadn't made any kind of a hit; in fact, he's probably the guy in the hearts of his Yankee teammates, anyway.

Joe Gordon set a new record for chances accepted in a World Series with 43 putouts and assists. He made a lot of good plays, Crosetti didn't set any records, he made the best plays, though, the tough ones. Chandler could have been beaten today, except for Crostti's play on Morton Cooper's bad hop with two on base in the fourth inning. And that one wasn't as spectacular as his backhanded catch of Klein's grounder in the fifth.

Marius Russo owes his victory in the third game to Crosetti in a great measure. That was the 2-1 game, you remember. With the fleet Stan Musial on third, Walker Cooper drove a ball on the ground toward center field and Musial was rounding second when he thought better of it, because Crosetti had knocked that ball down, and kept it to an infield single. And so the Cardinals couldn't score the tying run on Litwhiler's long fly that followed.

Crosetti wasn't supposed to be playing in a 1943 World Series. At least this spring he wasn't. You see, the Yankees had another shortstop, a sprightly young fellow from Newark, who had stolen 72 bases, and was going to run Crosetti out of the shortstop job with the Yanks. After all Crosetti wasn't much of a hitter.

The Yankees had Crosetti on the bench until mid-June, but George Stirnweiss' flop at the shortstop job called for desperate measures. Joe McCarthy reinstalled the veteran Crosetti. From that day, the Yankees started to roll.

As for the Cardinals, Manager Billy Souuthworth is now in a fine position to second guess himself after today's losing game. Southworth decided on a new line-up against Spud Chandler today. His regular outfielders, Danny Litwhiler and Harry Walker, he benched because they were right-handed, in favor of the left-handed Debs Garms and Johnny Hopp.

This was strategy.

Well, it proved to be very unstrategic on Southworth's part. Because neither Garms nor Hopp got a hit all afternoon. And Harry Walker, who was sent in to pinch hit in the seventh, singled, and Danny Litwhiler, who went in to pinch hit in the eighth, also singled. The ywere the guys who were benched because they couldn't hit Chandler.

For Walker Cooper, the 1943 series was a story of transition from hero to goat in one year. He had been the big gun for the Cards against the Yanks last October, the dangerous hitter, smart defensive catcher. During the past week, he compiled the most unenviable record of this series. He chipped in with three of the Cardinals' ten errors. He made a wild throw that didn't get into the box score, he was a guilty party on that wild pitch that lost the opening game for Max Lanier. And today he tried to stretch a single into a double as if he had never heard of the throwing arm of Charley Keller.

out string by walking Etten on four pitches in the second inning, and here, apparently, was the pitcher Cardinal supporters were praying for. Cooper was giving the Yankees his fast ball and screw ball, and they were looking very futile indeed.

He went into the sixth inning holding the Yankees to three hits, but getting no better than a draw with Chandler, and there was no immediate sign in the sixth that he was about to lose the ball game. Metheny and Johnson were easy outs before Keller came to bat.

And then Keller singled to right field.

Manager Bill Southworth, with an apparent premonition that all might not go well with Cooper at this stage of the game, had the left-handed Max Lanier warming up in the bull pen, despite Cooper's shutout pitching, but there seemed no call to replace him yet. Cooper gave his attention now to Dickey.

It happened on the first pitch the big guy threw to Dickey—that home run we were telling you about—a curve ball that wasn't fast getting up to plate but was very fast getting away from there after Dickey swung.

The Yankees caught an early train to their various homes after the game, with their winning ends of the World Series cash. They each earned a bundle of $6,405.08 approximately 2,100 more than the Cardinals will draw.

Cards Helped Beat Selves

While Chandler was beating the Cardinals, they were also doing a job of beating themselves. They were only one hit away from scoring runs in each of the first four innings, and they had the tying runs on base in the eighth and ninth, but they flunked out wretchedly.

They made an empty gesture toward scoring right at the outset when Klein beat out a rap off Chandler's thigh with none out, and a sacrifice put him on second. Chandler walked Musial, but Walker Cooper and Kurowski grounded out.

Again in the second, Chandler was in trouble after Sanders led off with a single to right, the Cardinals for the first time in this series got rowdy at this point, and got a break. Hopp grounded to Gordon and when the throw for a force play was made to Crosetti, Sanders barged into the Yankee shortstop so solidly that Crosetti dropped the ball and all hands were safe.

Rue Was Adamant

The Yankees squawked loudly that Sanders was out because Crosetti had stepped on the bag and was in the act of throwing for a double play when he dropped the ball, but Umpire Joe Rue talked them down. Chandler though, wouldn't let a run loose. Marion sacrificed the runners to third and second and Chandler then fanned Morton Cooper and got rid of Klein on a fly to right.

It was a heedless, headless piece of base running by Walker Cooper that cost the Cardinals their scoring chance in the third. He singled to left with two out, and never lifting his head as he rounded first, tried to stretch it to a double. Charley Keller threw him out at second.

The Cards put the first two men to face Chandler in the fourth on base, and again the mob in the stands was whooping it up. But they got nothing. Kurowski beat out a bunt and Sanders drew a walk, but Chandler then became very stubborn. Johnny Hopp, a new figure in the Cardinal outfield, worked Chandler to a 3-0 count, and then watched two strikes come across the plate before going fishing for a wide pitch that ended in a strikeout. Chandler got out of the inning with some help by Frankie Crosetti, who reached up for a bad hop off Marion's bat and hauled it down for a force play at second.

Again in the fifth inning it seemed that the Cardinals would get their lead-off on base for the fourth time in five innings, but Crosetti would hold still. He backhanded a fierce grounder off Klein's bat and then threw the Cardinal out on the play of the day, after which the grateful Chandler fanned the next two hitters.

Crosetti lifted Chandler out of more trouble in the sixth after O'Dea, who replaced the injured Walker Cooper, victim of a foul tip behind the plate, led off with an infield hit. Crosetti grabbed Kurowski's grounder and routed it around the bases for a double play.

All of a sudden with two out in the eighth the Cards put the tying runs on base. O'Dea singled to right center and Kurowski moved him to second with a single to left, Sanders, a home run hitter in this series, produced nothing more than a routine grounder to Gordon to end the inning.

Tie on Base in Ninth

And with one out in the ninth the Cards again put the tying runs on base. Marion singled to left and Pinch-hitter Danny Litwhiler singled to center to put him on second. Chandler, however, was unperturbed. He struck out Klein and watched Garms end the game with a grounder to Gordon.

The Yankees had their revenge on the team that had beaten them in five games in the 1942 series, and left the field smirking at the big flag on the center field pole which said something like "World Champion Cardinals."

Parks Kayoes Mitchell in Fifth Round

By Al Costello
Post Staff Writer

George Parks, 21-year-old local Negro, waited until the fifth round before exploding his slumber-inducing right hand on the chin of elongated Napolean Mitchell of Philadelphia last night at Turner's Arena. But when George found the range—that was all, brother.

The 1197 paid subscribers who dropped a gross gate of $1814 into Joe Turner's till, saw the 191-pound Mitchell and the 188-pound Parks stage a reasonably exact facsimile of "the waltz you saved for me" until Parks set up Mitchell with a long left to the chin which staggered the Philadelphian. Then Parks shot his right and Mitchell caught it on the chin. He took nine and got up. Parks pitched and Mitchell caught again. This time he didn't get up. It took only 1:50 of the fifth.

Up to the time the roof fell in on Mitchell the bout was purely a left-handed sticking contest, with Parks, anxious to get it over, doing all the forcing and the skinny Mitchell doing all of the retreating. Parks didn't throw more than two or three rights before the final furious flurry which finished the Philadelphian.

Parks Got the Needle

After four rounds of this sort of thing, even patient John Carter, Parks' adviser from the corner got tired and stuck a pin in Georgie. It woke the local boy and that was all there was to it. It was ridiculously easy when Parks went to work.

Aaron Perry, 141, Washington, took a unanimous six-round decision from Maxie Starr, 143½, Edgewood Arsenal soldier, in what was presumed to be the semifinal bout. Perry outslugged the game but light-hitting Starr, who showed no respect for the punching powers of Aaron and was fighting back at the final bell, when Perry was throwing everything in a vain effort to score a kayo.

Tommy Mollas, 150, Baltimore, scored an impressive six round victory over Waddie Forcey, 156, Washington, and George Ferrell, 139, Washington, put Wally Brown, 140, Washington, to sleep in 1:17 of the fourth round in the opener.

Other 6-rounders saw Wayman Stewart, 128½, Washington, take a unanimous decision from Joe Woodley, 125, Baltimore, and Lee Rosan, 147, Baltimore, and Nay Palmer, 147, Washington, battle to a free slapping draw.

SECOND INNING

YANKEES—Keller was called out on strikes on three pitches, the third being a slow curve. It was the fourth straight strikeout. Dickey also was called out on strikes on five pitches including a foul. No runs, no hits, one error, one left.

CARDINALS—On the second pitch, Sanders rapped a ground single into right field. On the first pitch, Hopp bounced to Chandler, who threw to Crosetti in an attempt to force Sanders at second, and as Crosetti attempted to make a double play, Sanders bumped his arm causing him to drop the ball and both runners were called safe. It was an assist for Chandler and an error for Crosetti. Manager Joe McCarthy rushed out of the dugout for his first protest of the series and others of the Yankees clustered around Umpire Rue at second, but the decision stood. Marion sacrificed. Etten to Gordon, who covered first. M. Cooper struck out. Klein flied to Metheny in deep right.

Celebration Rocks N. Y. Locker Room

By Charles Dunkley
Associated Press Sports Writer

Sportsman's Park, St. Louis, Oct. 11.—In booming bass voices and piping tenors, the victorious New York Yankees celebrated with song in an uproariously noisy demonstration in their dressing room today after regaining the World Championship from the St. Louis Cardinals.

After finishing with this favorite victory song, they swung into the "Beer Barrel Polka," the theme song of their 1941 triumph over the Brooklyn Dodgers. Finally, they tuned in with "Pistol Packin' Mama," which they adopted a few weeks ago as their marching chorus for this year.

And Windows Rattled

The joyful players, their arms wrapped around each other's shoulders, sang at the top of their voices and the windows actually rattled in the sturdy old dressing room.

Billy the Kid Southworth, manager of the losing Cardinals, trooped in among the Yankee players to extend congratulations to Manager Joe McCarthy. White-haired Kenesaw Mountain Landis, baseball's high commissioner, then shouldered his way in.

Relief Pitcher Jim Turner and First-Sacker Nick Etten seized Landis, hoisting him to their shoulders, and the players roared into another chorus of "Lay That Pistol Down, Babe."

The Cooper brothers, Pitcher Morton and Catcher Walker, charged in through the milling mob to extend their felicitations to Manager McCarthy and Spud Chandler, the Yankee right-hander, who took the clinching decision over Mort, 2 to 0.

"Oh, my boy," McCarthy beamed to Chandler, "you pitched two wonderful games — just like I thought you would."

Dickey Got a Kick

Bill Dickey, whose sixth-inning home run blast carried a series pay check for $6123.20 for each of the Bombers, said he got as much kick in hitting that homer as in any other hit he'd ever made.

"Boy," he smiled, "that certainly felt good. It was a high fast ball so I gave it a ride."

The players slammed their dripping wet uniforms into trunks and made for the showers, still singing. They splashed water all over McCarthy and Earle Combs, their first-base coach.

All Combs could say, and repeat, was, "Boy, you said it; you said it, boy."

"Sonny Boy," he said in his Georgia drawl, throwing his arm around Crosetti, "you pulled a lot of chestnuts out of the oven for me today."

Cards Are Sober

"We did the best we could," said gangling Martin Marion.

That's what Manager Billy Southworth said, too. He said it in more words, but the point was the same—"the boys stayed in there. I'm proud of every one of 'em. They played clean and hard and I have nothing but compliments for any of them."

Army in Pass Drill

Sunday Tests Face Steagles And Redskins

While the Redskins are playing the Green Bay Packers Sunday in Milwaukee they probably will keep an eye to the scoreboard and watch the progress of the Phil-Pitt Steagles against the Chicago Bears on the same day in a Chicago game.

The Steagles loom as a definite threat to the Redskins Eastern title hopes, and a far more serious contender than the New York Giants. The Brooklyn Dodgers hardly figure. With the Bears losing men week by week, and the fact they were unable to score during the first half against the Cardinals Sunday, the Steagles are in an excellent position to pull an upset.

Bob Masterson, who, in view of replacements, would be the most costly loss to the Redskins with the exception of Sammy Baugh, hobbled around yesterday on crutches and his sprained ankle may keep him out of the Packer game.

The 'Skins will practice at 5 p. m. today and have another workout tomorrow before leaving Thursday for their second league test.

Mid-Atlantic Greenkeepers Play to Ryan

Tommy Ryan, professional and greenkeeper at Alexandria's Belle Haven Club, won the annual championship of the Mid-Atlantic Association of Greenkeepers yesterday at Columbia Country Club with a 73-7, 66.

Ryan was out in a 1-over-par 36 and was back just two shots over regulation figures for a 37 and 73 which, minus his seven-shot handicap, won low net by four shots. Ryan's 73 was also good for low gross.

Bill Glover, manager and greenkeeper of the Fairfax, Va. club, was elected president at the annual election following the tournament. Reginald Giddings, Gibson Island, was elected vice president, and Tommy Ryan, secretary-treasurer. Speakers on the program included Col. H. B. Musser, formerly of Penn State and now of the Washington Airport, and Dr. E. N. Cory of the University of Maryland.

Pro-Senior Golf Thursday Draws Joe Kirkwood

Barnett plans to assign Kirkwood an early starting time and have the veteran Philadelphia professional put on his exhibition between 4:30 and 5 p. m. George Smith, prominent Philadelphia pro, will accompany Kirkwood.

Gray Mare Edges Filly; Gondolina 3d

By Walter Haight
A Staff Correspondent

Pimlico, Md., Oct. 11.—An old gray mare and a sprightly filly hooked up in a stretch duel here this afternoon and youth wasn't served. It was a battle for first and second betting choices and the finish was in reverse. Silvestra, carrying the colors of the Woolford Farm, proved a half-length better than Tellmenow, owned by Hal Price Headley. A ding-dong battle it was in the closing stages, with Silvestra finally demonstrating her superiority by crossing the line a half length in advance of her rivals.

Third money in the field of seven operating over the 6-furlong sprint course went to G. R. Watkins' Gondolina. Pig Tails, coupled with Silvestra in the entries, was scratched. The winner returned a $6.70 mutuel and was clocked in 1:12 3-5.

With the exception of some early front-running done by Eddie Talbot's Makeshift, the race was between Silvestra and Tellmenow. The Headley filly was closest to the pacemaker and took command when Makeshift began to falter. Nick James, riding Silvestra, sent the mare up on the outside. There was a keen tussle for an eighth of a mile before Silvestra drew away gradually.

Wilson to Play Roosevelt in Feature Game

Roosevelt High, unbeaten in three starts in the interhigh series, will take the field against Wilson, with a win, a tie and a loss in the background, in the feature spot game of the series this week, Dallas Shirley, director of physical education in the senior high schools, announced last night.

The spot game will be played at Central Stadium at 3 p. m. Saturday.

Shirley said there had been some discussion about making the Coolidge-Eastern game the feature this week on the basis of Eastern's surprise victory over Western and Cooldige's two-game streak in the series. Point scoring, however, gives winning teams two points, tying teams one point. Thus Roosevelt and Wilson have nine points between them, while Coolidge and Eastern have but six.

In addition, Shirley said, many astute observers of local high school football believe Wilson has a much better team than its loss to Coolidge and tie with Tech indicate. They point to the near-touchdown foiled by the end of the half in the Tech game and the Colts' great showing over Central.

The Coolidge game will be played at Eastern Stadium, and Western will play at Anacostia in the other high school match, both at 4 p. m. Friday.

Two Navy Backs Out With Injuries

Annapolis, Oct. 11 (AP).—Two injuries were reported out of the lineup by Navy coaches today as a result of the Middies' 14-13 football victory over the Duke University Blue Devils last Saturday in Baltimore.

Backs Jim Pettit and Bob Jenkins were injured and may be out for a week or 10 days. Pettit sustained a leg injury, the seriousness of which is still unknown, and Jenkins is nursing a strained back.

However, the Tars held their regular Monday afternoon scrimmage as they prepared for the Penn State contest in Annapolis this coming weekend.

Draft Fighter Takes Case to Supreme Court

By Edward H. Higgs
Associated Press Staff Writer

A draft registrant who flatly refused to take the Army oath was granted yesterday a Supreme Court review of a decision that he was legally inducted when Army officers read the oath to him.

The issue was raised by Arthur Goodwyn Billings, onetime instructor at the University of Texas, who asserts he is opposed to war. Billings told his Selective Service board, which refused to classify him as a conscientious objector, that he would never serve in the Army.

On the other hand, the tribunal refused to grant a review to Walter Ford Gormly of Milwaukee, sentenced to a five-year penitentiary term for refusing to report to a conscientious objectors' work camp. Gormly had argued that such work would make him "an accessory to murder on the battlefield."

In Guardhouse for Year

The cases were among nearly 300 which the court passed upon at its first business session of the 1943-44 term. Arguments on those in which reviews were granted will start later.

Billings, who has been in a guardhouse at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., for a year, said he had planned, when he reported for his final physical examination, to refuse induction and turn himself over to civil authorities for action. When he would not stand and repeat the oath as it was read, Billings declared, an Army officer told him:

"That doesn't make any difference, you are in the Army now."

Subsequently, he was held for court-martial on a charge of refusing to obey an order for fingerprinting.

A District Federal Court refused to grant his release from military custody and the Tenth Federal Circuit Court upheld the District Court, ruling that a draft registrant cannot avoid induction by simply refusing to take the Army oath.

The Supreme Court declined to reconsider three of its previous decisions. One upheld the conviction of William R. Johnson, alleged Chicago gambler, on a charge of income tax evasion. Another ruled invalid Florida's attempt to place an inspection fee on fertilizer distributed by the Federal Government to farmers participating in the AAA soil conservation program.

The third, involving William Schneiderman, California Communist leader, held that a former alien's citizenship cannot be canceled simply because of his Communist Party membership.

Agreed to pass on a decision which sustained Massachusetts legislation prohibiting a parent or guardian from furnishing literature to a child for sale in any street or public place. The legislation was challenged by a member of Jehovah's Witnesses at Brockton.

Episcopal Convention Backs Lifting of Ban on Chinese

By the Associated Press

Cleveland, Oct. 11.—In their final sessions, clerical and lay delegates to the Protestant Episcopal Church's fifty-fourth triennial convention approved today a series of social measures.

Included were resolutions calling for repeal of the Chinese Exclusion Act, limiting the number of Chinese nationals permitted to enter the United States; United States participation and responsibility in the postwar world; and endeavor by the World Council of Churches for insistence on Christian principles in the peace settlement.

These resolutions earlier were adopted by the House of Bishops and supported by the Joint Commission on Social Reconstruction, which recommended creation of a "central council of the United Nations as an organ for cooperative action in prosecuting the war and organizing the peace."

Deputies also adopted a resolution expressing the church's intention to exercise "complete freedom of action" in Latin-American countries, a measure which church leaders said stemmed from efforts by others "to curtail the religious freedom of Christians in republics of Latin America."

Bishops failed to concur, however, and instead proposed that Episcopal representatives in the Federal Council of Churches be appointed as a special committee to act with the council in "investigating and resisting by all proper means any threat to the enjoyment of constitutional rights to religious liberty of members of this church in foreign mission fields."

"Our present work in Latin America should be developed to the fullest extent," said the bishops' resolution, later approved by the deputies.

Concurred with bishops in the first passage of a constitutional amendment to deprive retired bishops of the right to vote in the House of Bishops. Final action will be necessary at the 1946 convention.

Concurred with bishops on establishment of a joint commission to care for Episcopalians considered conscientious objectors, after rejecting an amendment which would have forbidden the commission to raise funds for support of conscientious objectors in public service camps.

Bishops announced appointment of a commission on a see for presiding bishops. Members include the Rev. Paul Matthews, retired Bishop of New Jersey; Bishop John D. Wing of Florida, and Bishop Noble C. Powell of Maryland. It has been proposed that the Washington, D. C., cathedral be made the seat of the presiding bishop's see.

Taft Assails International Bank as New Deal Method for Deficit Spending

By Jack Bell
Associated Press Staff Writer

Republican opposition cropped out in Congress yesterday to the Administration's proposal for a world bank. Senator Taft of Ohio said he would carry the fight to the Senate floor with a denunciation of the plan as "part of the general New Deal program to create new methods of deficit spending."

Taft, who is a member of the Senate Banking Committee which heard Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau explain the bank plan at a recent closed meeting, told a reporter he was "opposed to making loans to other countries in the guise of investments."

"In effect," Taft declared, "all of the money to be loaned abroad by the bank would come from the United States. It seems to me that after the war we are going to have to make emergency loans to other countries for working capital and rehabilitation of plants and machinery, but I believe these loans ought to be made directly by this Government under authority of Congress."

As outlined by Morgenthau, the proposed international bank would have 10 billion dollars in capital, of which the United States would furnish $3,500,000,000, Great Britain one billion and other countries the remainder. The bank would make loans for rebuilding of war-damaged cities and other such projects.

Taft expressed the conviction that administration of the bank might be controlled by prospective borrower countries, since its affairs would be carried on by a board of directors on which all members would have one representative. Voting power, however, would be closely related to shareholding.

"While I would approve a general policy of making loans for postwar relief and rehabilitation, it seems this bank would be a permanent institution," Taft said. "I disapprove heartily of any permanent international lending agency, because I believe it would be a repetition of what happened after the last war when we made loans to bring about an artificial stimulation in exports.

"Any operation of that kind is bound to collapse, just as the last attempt did in 1929, and cause a worse situation than if there never had been any loans made at all."

The Ohio Senator thought that if rehabilitation and relief loans were made to other countries immediately after the war, they ought to be limited to "two or three billion dollars a year for a couple of years and then scaled down to about a half billion dollars yearly."

Transit Staff Puts $300,000 in Bonds

E. D. Merrill, president of the Capital Transit Co., will certify to the United States Treasury Department today that company employes have reached their $300,000 goal in bond purchases and pledges in the "buy bonds to buy a bomber" campaign.

The bomber will have "Capital Transit Employes" painted on its nose. An official christening will be held at a local airport soon at a date to be fixed by the Treasury Department. Capital Transit Co. has 700 men in the armed services and the 5000 men and women on the home front cooperated in the Third War Loan drive.

Miss Jean Bartel, beauteous California girl who was selected as "Miss America" September 11 in Atlantic City, entertained servicemen last night at the Stage Door Canteen. She is making a tour throughout the country to help in the sale of war bonds.

Employes Threatened With Late Pay Checks

There's a real chance that the pay checks of Federal workers here will be delayed unless Treasury's Disbursement Division gets more help. The manpower shortage has this division on the ropes, and it's getting further behind in its work every day. Disbursements—the check-writing agency—has met every payroll deadline so far, but Guy Allen, the chief has warned the Civil Service Commission and other agencies that he won't be able to do it any longer if he continues to lose employes. And the Federal officials didn't have to be reminded delayed pay checks damage morale.

KLUTTZ

Last month Disbursements lost a net of 36 employes. It should have 1071 workers and it has fewer than 970. In more than two years it has had a 100 per cent turnover in personnel, 974 separations. The work is largely a mechanical operation, and most of the jobs pay $1440, plus overtime. The employes just won't stay in a CAF-2 job when they can get more money in other Government agencies or private business. Allen has tried repeatedly without success to get his employes upgraded. The Civil Service Commission has turned him down every time. Disbursements will write an estimated 18 million checks for Federal workers here this year besides paying thousands of others in cash.

Ben Merritt, the Greek expert who was on the staff of Governor Lehman and who was supposed to head up a delegation on foreign relief that was to go to Cairo, has quit because he wasn't sure what authority he would have, if any . . . Dillard Lassiter, who is resigning as chief investigator of the Ramspeck committee, is being considered seriously as administrator of Farm Security Administration . . . Col. Bryan Houston, OPA's new deputy director for rationing, was commandeered for the job by Assistant President Jimmy Byrnes. He'll be on leave from the Army . . . Council of Personnel Administration has gone on record in favor of the plan to give Federal workers a detailed statement of their gross earnings and deductions. However, it's split on how often it should be done, whether it should be every payday, once a year, or with each salary change.

Charles C. Concannon, chief of the chemical unit at the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, will be loaned to the Chilean government for a year . . . The National Institute of Public Affairs and the Council of Personnel Administration are jointly working out plans for the intensive training of 20 young men and women for administrative jobs. Each department and agency will be asked to make nominations to the council-institute committee. The nominees will be sent to school and be given an opportunity to work in every phase of administrative work during the nine-month period . . . The Army is urging the House and Senate Civil Service Committees to give quick approval to a bill which would permit retired Army officers to take civilian jobs in the War Department . . . More than 150 people have called Lester Marier, public health employe, to applaud his idea of not sending Christmas cards this year.

Navy expects to increase substantially its civilian staff both here and in the field by the end of the year. Employment here is expected to jump from 20,000 to 23,000 and in the field it will be expanded from 146,000 to 155,00. Moreover, 500 field employes in Navy hospitals are being withdrawn from a per annum basis and will be paid each day they work and they aren't included in the increase. . . . Selective Service has reduced its personnel steadily. It had 24,439 a year ago and the staff is being cut down to 22,344. At headquarters here the office is operating with 156 fewer employes. . . . Office of Censorship has 1327 military personnel and 11,624 civilians. . . . The Norfolk Navy Yard needs all sorts of skilled workers, trainees and laborers. Apply at 810 18th st. nw.

The Bailey-Clark bill which was passed last week by the Senate in an effort to restrict the deferment of men both in industry and Government may be vetoed. It all depends upon what interpretation is placed on the word "indispensable." It has been the Government's policy that no man is indispensable but that thousands can't be replaced. It's a known fact that at least three top officials were ready to recommend a veto of the bill if the House goes along with the Senate However, a reading of the Senate debate implies that a man who is indispensable is one who can't be replaced. If that holds true the bill won't be vetoed.

Meantime, fathers in the Federal service outside of Washington are being ordered up for induction and agencies are bombarding Washington for instructions. An executive order to liberalize deferments in the Federal service to postpone the calling of many Government fathers is under consideration and the President may make a statement on it, possibly today. The White House turned down a plan to postpone all fathers in Government except those in nondeferable jobs and now a compromise plan is under study.

200 Fathers Await Call In District

Physical Tests Have Been Held Since October 1; Total of 50,000 Registered

By Hanson H. Hathaway
Post Staff Writer

Two hundred pre-Pearl Harbor fathers out of a total known registration for the District of 50,000 have been reclassified 1-A, and are awaiting calls for induction into armed services, a spokesman at District Selective Service headquarters said yesterday.

Examinations and re-classifications have been going on since October 1, with notices going out daily calling registrants for preliminary examinations.

Preliminary examinations are a "screening" process through which the obviously physically disqualified are rejected. Those passing the examinations go automatically into Class 1-A unless occupationally deferred, or deferred because of "hardship" status.

No estimates could be given by Selective Service as to how many of the 50,000 would ultimately be inducted into fighting forces.

It appeared, however, that probably not more than 25 per cent of those to be called would reach soldier, sailor or marine status.

Many will be found in deferred occupations when final results are in from registrant analysis which ended October 1, a headquarters official said.

These, he said, would be placed in Classes 2-A and 2-B. Family conditions in the "hardship group" would "knock" them out of the national pre-Pearl Harbor father military pool of 6,559,000 married men estimated by General Hershey on August 21.

Still others would come under deferred classifications of 4-D for ministers and 4-B for officers of state.

Clearing up an impression of many that pre-Pearl Harbor fathers are those who became fathers only shortly before the Pearl Harbor attack, Selective Service said the phrase meant all fathers in the 18 to 38 years age bracket, even if their parenthood dates several years.

Citizens Name Tucker Head For 50th Year

Northeast Washington Citizens Association last night reelected Evan H. Tucker president for the fiftieth consecutive year. Others reelected were Roscoe Jenkins, first vice president; Francis M. Painter, second vice president; Joseph Notes, recording secretary; L. A. Jett, financial secretary; Edwin C. Worden, treasurer, and Joseph Callan, Henry Berger, John R. Jerrell, Cyrus F. Cook and Dr. Edward B. Macon, members at large of the executive committee.

TUCKER

Tucker, 79, has been active in citizen work for the past 57 years. Since his retirement from the real estate business he has devoted most of his energies to helping make Washington "one of the greatest cities of the world." The association which he heads discusses every bill which would affect any of its members.

Last night the group approved Senate bills to appoint a District police commissioner, to require labeling of horse meat, to apply District laws to the National Airport, Pentagon and Mount Vernon Highway areas, and a House bill to broaden powers of the Commissioners.

The association also went on record favoring improvements to the Eastern Market, instead of closing it, and opposing any sort of sales tax.

Southeast Businessmen

The McCarran plan to govern the District of Columbia by means of a city manager elected a board of seven commissioners was indorsed by the Southeast Business Men's Association meeting at 314 Pennsylvania ave. se. last night.

Other recommendations called for erection of a portable school building in the Bradbury Heights area; acquisition of FHA-owned land near the Stanton School, Good Hope and Naylor rds., for use by the school, and improvements to schools generally throughout the Southeast area.

Stanton Park

H. F. Linscott was elected president of the Stanton Park Citizens Association last night. Other officers named were Mrs. F. F. Menkhaus, vice president; John L. Bateman, secretary; Mrs. W. H. Smith, treasurer, and Linscott and Bateman, delegates to the Federation of Citizens Association.

The association indorsed the campaign to obtain Christmas gifts for servicemen, and heard a talk on the Community War Fund by Frank Strunk.

As the Advance Gifts and Government Divisions of the Community War Fund prepared to make reports today on their progress in Washington's drive for $4,800,000 for 145 agencies, the Business and Finance Division yesterday reported receipts of $116,285.78.

Division campaigners, who held their first report meeting at the Mayflower Hotel, were told by their chairman, John L. Vandegrift, that this total—8.6 per cent of their $1,350,000 quota—was "only the beginning."

"We can't let down these people, who are assisted by the fund," he asserted, as he declared that now was the time for sacrifices in the form of generous gifts to the campaign.

Reports were made as follows: Mrs. Charles A. Goldsmith, division vice chairman in charge of special assignments, $25,330; Philip Howat, industrial division, $6,122.50; Harvey J. Cheston, commercial division, $25,091.57; Ralph Lee, financial division, $7,209; Y. E. Booker, service division, $37,810.91, and Harry W. Haun, jr., consumer division, $13,522.

Solicitors Should "Interpret" Fund

A. G. Neal, president of the Potomac Electric Power Co., citing the 20 per cent increase in the Washington quota, told workers that they could solicit generous donations if they would act as "interpreters of the Community War Fund and the problems of the various agencies which it supports."

Held as typical of the increased giving which will send the 1944 campaign over the top was United Air Lines' presentation of $5000, when they had given $600 last year.

The Government division, which has pledged half of the District quota, will hold its first report meeting today at 6:45 p. m. in the Interdepartmental Auditorium. Charles P. Taft, director of community services for the Federal Security Agency and vice chairman of the President's War Relief Control Board, will speak. Music will be by the string quartet of the U. S. Navy Band, under direction of Lieut. Alfio Micci.

Advance Gifts Division

Second report meeting of the Advance Gifts Division will be today at 12:30 p. m. in the Chamber of Commerce Building.

Representatives of three Allied nations spoke to Department of Interior employes yesterday on behalf of the Community War Fund. At three consecutive meetings, nearly 6000 employes heard Mme. Constantin Fotitch, wife of the Yugoslavian Ambassador; Lieut. Arne Haugland of the Royal Norwegian army and now press attache of the Norwegian Embassy, and Tswen Ling Tsui, first secretary of the Chinese Embassy.

All three speakers emphasized the unbreakable spirit of the citizens of occupied countries and their determination to fight with whatever means is at hand, until victory is won.

Meanwhile, a series of "flying squadron" meetings launched the campaign in the Government Printing Office.

Gifts of Day's Pay Urged

Speakers included J. W. Stough, appeals chairman in the GPO; John R. Evans, vice president of Columbia Typographical Union 101, and Fred Walker, managing editor of the Trades Unionist.

Urging printers to give as much as one day's pay to the Community War Fund, a letter from Jesse B. Manbeck, president of the local Typographical Union, was read at a score of sectional meetings of printers.

Manbeck stated: "Millions of members of organized labor serve on the fighting front; other members serve on the production front; and a supporting army of dollars is needed to back up our members on all fronts. Community War Fund is the avenue through which these supporting dollars of organized labor in the Nation's Capital may be most effectively used to back up our fighting and producing armies."

Drive in Kalorama

At a tea given yesterday by Mrs. Barnet Nover, member of the Metropolitan Division, at the Sulgrave Club, wives of ambassadors, representing the various United Nations appeals sponsored by the fund, organized the drive for the Kalorama section.

Captaining the various teams in that area, of which Mrs. Nover is chairman, are Mme. Constantin Fotitch, wife of the Ambassador of Yugoslavia; Mme. V. S. Hurban, wife of the Ambassador of Czechoslovakia; Mme. Wilhelm Munthe de Morgenstierne, wife of the Ambassador of Norway; Mme. Cimon Diamantopoulos, wife of the Greek Ambassador; Mme. Wei Tao-ming, wife of the Chinese Ambassador; Mme. John Ciechanowski, wife of the Polish Ambassador; Mrs. John H. Magowan, wife of the Commercial Counselor of the British Embassy, and Madame H. R. VanHouten, wife of the Counselor of the Netherlands Embassy. Assisting them in pouring tea were Mrs. William O. Douglas and Mrs. Stanley Reed, wives of the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court.

College to Get Ackland Fund, Court Rules in Long Will Case

By Joseph Paull
Post Staff Writer

The strange dream of William Hayes Ackland, a local "hotel hermit" who left $1,400,000 when he died in 1940, may soon be a reality. It was the wish that his body be interred with his writings and paintings in an elaborate museum-mausoleum on the campus of a university.

Upon Ackland's dream was based a year-long series of court cases which ended yesterday when the United States Court of Appeals decided four cases arising from the two wills he drew up.

It decided a question of interest to charitable and benevolent institutions. The appellate court decreed that in the District of Columbia the doctrine of cy pres (which allows that should one agency refuse to carry out a request a similar agency may be appointed to do so) is in force.

In 1936, Ackland, who was then 80, drew up a will providing a trust for an art museum which would house his tomb, his manuscripts and some paintings he accumulated. At the time, he was a resident of a cheap hotel here, living completely alone. The museum was to be at Duke University, or at North Carolina University if Duke should not accept. If neither accepted, he appointed Rollins College.

Duke University officials corresponded with Ackland and persuaded him it was superfluous to include the other schools. Ackland changed his will accordingly in 1938.

He died in Nashville, Tenn., and before preparations were being made to ship his body to Durham, N. C., Duke University declined the fortune, giving no reason for doing so.

Ackland's relatives then entered the case. They had been bequeathed but little. Ackland had no immediate family.

The relatives argued that since Duke didn't accept the money, the will was invalidated, and since they were nearest of kin, they were to receive the entire estate. In court, Ackland was accused of being eccentric and miserly. The relatives said that he wanted only to build an "elaborate sarcophagus" and that his writings were worthless.

Attorney O. Max Gardner, representing N. C. U., replied, "The only tear Ackland's relatives ever shed about him was when they read his will."

He contended Ackland's purpose was to aid art in the South and that this purpose should be carried out.

The Appellate Court, in an opinion written by Justice Justin Miller, decreed that the lower court is empowered to decide according to the wills to what university the money is to go, but eliminated the relatives from any further share.

Cadet Corps Enrollment Shows Gain

Increases From 35 to 38 Per Cent Despite Drop in School Students

Enrollment in the High School Cadet Corps has increased from 35 to 38 per cent of the male students, while the number of youths in senior high schools has dropped 769, Acting Superintendent of Schools Robert L. Haycock reported yesterday to the House District Committee.

Dr. Haycock's survey was in reply to a request made at the last meeting of the full committee two weeks ago, when Chairman Randolph (Democrat) of West Virginia declared that he and other members needed the information as background for proposed legislation to make military training compulsory in local high schools.

Haycock explained that the corps today numbers 2322 of the grand total of 6064 male pupils. Just a year ago, he said, there were 2456 cadets out of 6833 students.

Record "Disappointing"

The acting superintendent said, however, that the record was "disappointing," because school officials have campaigned to boost enlistments.

He further broke down the statistics by pointing out that this year there are 4656 boys in the white schools of whom 1568 or 33.70 per cent are cadets. In Negro schools, 754 of the 1408 puplis are in the corps.

He contrasted these figures with 1942, when the cadet corps in white schools numbered 1695 of the 5391 enollment, and in Negro schools was 761 of the 1442 total.

Figures on Enrollments

"The pupil loss is 769 and the cadet loss is 134," Haycock said. "The gain in white schools was 2.26 per cent, in Negro was .78 per cent, and in all high schools was 2.35 per cent."

The report showed that 5 of the 11 high schools had increases in cadet enrollments: Central, 2 per cent; McKinley, 27 per cent; Roosevelt, 37 per cent; Cardozo, 33 per cent, and Dunbar, 15 per cent.

Randolph submitted for the record letters from Clarence A. Arata, executive secretary of the Washington Board of Trade, and George E. Keneipp, head of its public school committee, indorsing the proposed plan to make military training compulsory.

450 Teachers Still Lack Salary Checks

Four hundred and fifty Washington school teachers are still without pay due them October 4, and many of them are being forced to borrow money to live, it was learned yesterday.

The 2700 regular teachers were paid yesterday after a week's delay, but temporary teachers and new appointees, who receive minimum salaries, are still living on promises.

The teachers who were not paid are those who do not have permanent status and therefore are most loath to complain, it was said. They are subject to immediate dismissal for any infractions of the rules.

Old-timers in the system said these teachers have been suffering most from the delay and needed their checks most.

Some of these girls are just out of normal school, working their probationary year, it was reported. They have no backlog to fall back upon because this is their first year as workers, it was said, and many of them are borrowing money for carfare.

Teachers yet unpaid are listed on two supplementary payrolls and are those whose appointments were not approved until the first Board of Education meeting September 15, according to School Budget Officer R. W. Holt.

Two Supplementary Rolls

One supplementary roll was sent to District Auditor A. R. Pilkerton's office, October 7, and the other, containing 150 names, only yesterday, Pilkerton said.

Those listed on the first roll will be paid the end of this week, the others not until next week, he said.

Checks were delayed for the completion of withholding tax computations and because many changes in staff necessitated extra bookkeepping work, it was said. Teachers have had to wait for their pay four times in less than a year, but this has been the longest delay.

One-Button-Roll Job Arrives To Mollify D. C. Zoot Suiters

By Helene Champlain
Post Staff Writer

Gates, it'll take more than WPB restrictions and zoot suit riots to undrape the shape of Seventh Street Sharpies' threads.

Maybe the cats aren't as hep as they were a year ago March, when WPB officials doomed baggy knees and the juke jackets that hid them, and maybe the zoots aren't as solid—but they're still with us.

Men's clothing manufacturers have cooked some one-button-roll jive to pacify both factions of the clothes clash. At the present round, the addicts are calling them "reet," while WPB is musing, "probably illegal."

Zooters, who thought for a while that WPB restrictions had them beat, may shed their prewar models and dig the new drapes at their favorite 7th st. haunt.

For an uninformed icky, Joseph M. Gold, manager of Butler's Federal Clothing Stores, 621 Seventh st. nw, deep in the heart of the hep belt, described the zoot manufacturers' answer to WPB orders.

"It's the Thunderbolt Model," he said proudly, explaining that "it hits you right between the eyes."

Dig it, cousins: "We've still got the exaggerated shoulders. They can't touch those. You can't do much about the three-quarter length. That we got to put up with, no more overcoats. But you can get around that with this new one-button-roll double-breasted business. Also slash pockets. Overlapping pleats we can't have, so we got stitched pleats in the pants. And the tight cuffs are still right there."

The majority wouldn't wear

them, but a canvass of clothing retailers in that line indicated that they send the hepsters right out of this proverbial world. Several stores are selling them, but fast, while others are anxiously anticipating their first orders.

WPB officials haven't yet come face to face with the 1943 zoot suits, but, confronted with pictures of them in a national magazine, they decided "they probably represent a violation of regulations governing men's clothing." An opinion was voiced that the suit coat appeared to be too long and the trousers too wide, and the matter will be referred to the WPB compliance division for investigation.

On still another front, the Men's and Boys' Separate Trousers Industry Advisory Committee is besieging WPB for restoration of pleats in men's trousers. They contend it is all "in the interest of the war effort."

In Langer Bill

Ramspeck Hits Higher U. S. Pensions

Outright opposition to the Langer bill calling for a 15 per cent increase in annuities paid retired Federal workers was voiced last night by Representative Robert Ramspeck (Democrat) of Georgia, chairman of the House Civil Service Committee, in a speech before members of the Federal Club at the Willard Hotel.

The annuity bill calls for the increase to cover the duration and six months thereafter, providing the resultant payment does not exceed $2500 a year.

At the same time, Ramspeck doused the hopes of Federal workers for pay-increase legislation by declaring that he saw little chance for Federal salary action until 1945.

"It is possible that we may have a public debt of 300 billion dollars at the war's end," he asserted. "What with increased taxation, this is no time to suggest pay rises. Neither Congress nor the taxpayer would take kindly to it."

While advocating that the McKellar bill to give the Senate control over higher-bracket Federal jobs, be given a hearing, the speaker declared his opposition to it on the grounds that it would place too much power in the hands of too few persons.

Prior to the address by Ramspeck, the club adopted a resolution urging that the Civil Service Commission develop a permanent plan for protecting social security rights acquired by Federal officers and employes.

James Connaghan Funeral Service Set for Today

Funeral services for James Connaghan, 73, who died Saturday at Soldiers Home Hospital, will be held today at 2 p. m. at Hysong's funeral home, 1300 N st. nw. Burial will be at Arlington.

A veteran of the Spanish-American and World Wars. Mr. Connaghan was born August 15, 1870, in Ireland. He came to America at an early age and lived in Pennsylvania. Enlisting in the Army in February, 1883, he served in the Spanish-American War, the Philippine campaign and the World War. He was a color sergeant of the Headquarters Company, First Infantry, when he retired in August, 1918.

Services today will be conducted by the Rev. William N. Vincent, pastor of the Eastern Presbyterian Church, of which Mr. Connaghan was a member.

Gas Throwers Sought

Unidentified tear-gas bomb throwers, who terrified residents of the G and 4th st. sw. neighborhood Saturday night, were still at large yesterday, Fourth Precinct police said, describing the culprits as "pranksters." In the meantime, Sergt. Sheldon R. McKee said that he was examining the bombs to trace their origin.

House Group Approves 4 District Bills

The House District Committee yesterday reported favorably four of the five District bills recommended for approval by Representative McGehee's judiciary subcommittee, and deferred action on a fifth, the so-called "dognapper bill."

Legislation reported favorably would:

Tighten present laws covering the sale of tax certificates issued against property on which taxes are delinquent.

Make bicyclists and streetcar operators liable on a par with motorists in cases of leaving the scene of an accident or operating a vehicle while under the influence of alcohol.

Establish automobile parking lots on District-owned property acquired for other purposes.

The committee decided to put aside the "dognapper" measure when several members declared that they felt the penalties proposed were "too drastic." It provides a maximum fine of $150 or imprisonment for 30 days for persons harboring dogs other than their own for 48 hours without furnishing the poundmaster with description and tag number of the dog; a fine of $100 or 90 days in jail for injuring in any way a dog belonging to someone else without notifying police; and a fine of $300 or 90 days imprisonment for "any person who sets out poison for or otherwise destroys or attempts to destroy" a dog.

In other business before the committee, a delegation representing Patterson School, headed by Joseph Bockavoc, 199 Chesapeake st. sw., protested against District officials' failure to remove two buildings on the school site to provide playground facilities.

Col. Charles W. Kutz, engineering Commissioner, explained that the school was a temporary structure and that its location has been deemed unsafe by the War Department because it is directly on the route of low-flying airplanes landing at Bolling Field. Colonel Kutz asserted that he thought it would be advisable to change the location of the school, and added that the District has no funds with which to remove the two buildings in question.

Lieut Helen Cooper of the WAC recruiting office at 1400 Pennsylvania ave. nw. appeared to make plans with the District Committee for a ceremony in the House caucus room at 10:30 a. m. October 22, in which 100 Washington girls, comprising the first District WAC company, will be sworn into the corps. Members of the committee and the Board of Commissioners will be guests.

D. C. Officials To Discuss Manpower

Heads of District institutions and the District Commissioners will meet today in the office of Commissioner Guy Mason to discuss the acute manpower situation which exists in all public institutions.

Commissioner Mason, who called the meeting, said yesterday:

"The situation with respect to help of all kinds—except physicians—which exist in all District-operated institutions is serious, and we must find some way to solve it.

"The latest official to bring it to my attention was Daniel L. Finucane, superintendent of Glenn Dale Sanatorium. The situation there is the same as in other District-operated establishments where there is acute shortages of cooks, attendants, guards, nurses, aides and other needed employes.

"The purpose of the meeting will be to explore all phases of the question, find out exactly how many employes are needed, and in what category they fall. Our next step will be to attempt to secure this help from the United States Employment Service. In the event this fails we will advertise in the daily press."

What I Like About Washington

(It can happen here! There are people who enjoy this crowded, confused and often irritating city. Apropos of recent criticism of the Capital's atmosphere, attitudes, lack of glamour, etc., some of the city's defenders have written and voiced to this column their appreciation of living here. Herewith are some of the things they—and this writer—like about Washington.)

The open vistas of trees and white buildings unobscured by factory smoke or skyscrapers . . . the constant reminder from the Capitol dome, gray and eternal against the sky, that this is America . . . the casual passing by the White House . . . the contact with the historic places that are part of every American schoolboy's tradition . . . the intimacy with Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, who still live here—not alone in marble . . . the overhanging sense of the past combined with the pressing challenge of the future.

The calm, leisurely Potomac always arousing a nostalgia for the tempo and romance of Colonial Days . . . the white spacious stretches of Constitution Avenue . . . the unexpected little parks with their pigeons and squirrels, serving as havens for the toddlers, the elderly and the wayfarers . . . the sparkle of Connecticut Avenue on a rainy night in fall and a sunny morning in spring . . . the intrepid patriots on rearing brass horses . . . the dignified stateliness of Massachusetts avenue . . . the green hills of Arlington receiving each night the wearied sun.

* * * *

The delicacy and whimsy of spring . . . the soft, deep blue of the close hanging skies on summer nights . . . the color and vigor of the loitering fall . . . the varying and surprising moods of winter . . . the atmospheric quietude unbroken by steam whistles or the roll of engines . . . the leisurely ways of the old Washingtonians . . . the soft and lingering aura of the South.

* * * *

The fresh clean faces of the throngs of white collar workers . . . the absence on the streets of men and women bent and darkened by the machine . . . the courtesy of sidewalk crowds . . . the kindliness of persons of whom you ask directions . . . the friendliness of strangers who talk in street cars, buses, and restaurants . . . the essentially human quality of a city not mechanized nor industrialized.

* * * *

The opportunities for exciting mental adventure in the museums, the Library of Congress, the galleries of the Senate and the House . . . the privilege of watching the direction of this Nation's great experiment in Government from a box seat . . . the rubbing of elbows with all the people of the Nation, the soft-speaking Southerners, the brisk impersonal New Yorkers, the direct friendly Mid Westerners, the vigorous indomitable West Coasters . . . the stimulation of mingling with people who have lived all over the world, in Government or naval or military service . . . the meeting of those from other countries, the Latin Americans, the Europeans the Asiatics . . . the gradual losing of regional provinciality and rivalry . . . the feeling of greater closeness to all Americans . . . the enlarging sense of being a part of one world.

THREE LITTLE WOOLS

By Ruth Gregory

See how they feel, see how they look, see how they wear! These particular wools are worth a round—several rounds—sung by the best choral group in Washington.

Because they're lyric in line and color. Because they're warped and woofed out of 100 per cent virgin wool. Because each of them manages to disguise rigid L-85 fabric requirements—no skimpy look anywhere.

Wools take a lot more doing on the part of the designer than crepes and cottons. At least, wools that emerge as soft and figure-dramatizing as these sketched. How is it done? We don't know. It's enough for us to spot master craftsmanship—no questions asked.

Just for fun—and before you go any farther—try to pick the most expensive dress in the group. It's the one with the ruffly jabot front, and it's one of the "top-drawer" wools. Just about $70. It's the cream of the crop and you'll know why when you've seen it and felt it.

The one with the jewel-button tabs at shoulder and hip is about $40, and the gay patchpocket one is about $30—this one is fashioned out of 100 per cent cashmere. All of them are available in several colors—those description-defying fall shades we've talked about before. Even the manufacturers get a little color-blind trying to name them. Maybe you can think up better ones yourself—like artichoke green and sweet potato brown—wonderful off-shades that are nameless.

Here's one place where wool-gathering makes sense. We recommend it for cold days ahead.

Your Baby And Mine

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

The first bed for baby will be a bassinet or something very similar in the form of a clothes basket. Either one should be large enough so the growing baby has room to stretch arms and legs without battering them against the sides.

For my money, the bassinet or clothes basket should have one or two coats of flat paint in any soft, pastel shade or white, and a finishing coat of dullish enamel. This makes a good-looking bed which stays good looking as long as the baby uses it. Those with frills and plaited coverings look beautiful, but rapidly grow wilted and frumpish.

The baby's own dainty comforts and blankets in pale colors and perhaps two stunnnig satin bows at each handle will make any bassinet, however simply decorated, look good enough to eat.

No pillow is needed for the bassinet, just a thick, soft pad which fits, a wet-resistant protector for the pad and a felted or quilted cotton pad over this. The sheets may well be squares cut from aging larger sheets, for this bed will hardly be used beyond the third month and one can economize by using the good portions of old sheets for this bassinet and buy new, crib-sized sheets for the bed which comes later.

The bassinet may fit the baby's length after his third month, but an active baby constantly is pushing up and banging his head on the top of the basket as well as hurting his hands when he flings them around, as babies do.

When the real crib is purchased it should be one large enough to accommodate the baby until his fourth or fifth year. It, too, will need a thick, well-made mattress with wet-resistant mattress protector and quilted pad over this. The crib blankets and comforts used for the bassinet will fit even better in this larger bed. Until the child asks for a pillow, which will not be for several years, he is better off sleeping flat on the mattress.

Most children who never know pillows will have none of them, but if they desire one, it is all right to provide a soft, flat pillow at about 4 years of age.

Our leaflet, "Layets and Confinement Necessities," may be had by sending a 3-cent stamped, self-addressed envelope with your request to Myrtle Meyer Eldred in care of this newspaper.

Children's Shoes

If the children's shoes wear out faster than their ration stamps allow, don't just grumble about it. Instead, tell your story to your local War Price and Rationing Board. The Board is allowed to issue extra shoe stamps, not only to children but to industrial workers and other civilians who need more shoes than the regular ration provides.

Happy in Her Life and in Her Government Job, Widow Has but One Complaint: A Man Associate Annoys Her Greatly by Addressing Chief as 'Sir'

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I read, enjoy, glory in your column,—your humor, your wrath, your pungent advice. A widow with a lone child (a son, 14) my life is singularly "uncomplex." My problem is purely one of "opinion,"—or so my co-worker says. And he is the person on whom it centers. Said co-worker addresses,—nay, prefaces and heavily punctuates,—all his remarks to our Chief with "sir," "sir," and more "sir." He says, "It's done in the service." He says it's a mark of respect; calls it good policy. But it makes my nerves crawl with distaste to hear it.

Said co-worker is the servile type; not quite a Casper Milquetoast; but earnest and hard-working, who definitely belongs to the "try-to-get-ahead" school. I am not so hard working, so earnest; and no respector of big shots as such,—but only of their abilities and their humanness, when and if definitely demonstrated. And getting ahead in Government service by "sir-ing" one's superiors seems cheap and revolting to me. Office relations between said co-worker and myself are pleasant enough, because he is the professional "get-along-well-with-people" type. But to me, he isn't worthwhile. What little he reads, he believes as gospel.

He keeps very, very quiet about his background and education; and by Government standards he has a "good" job; better than he ever had before, I gather; and he got the job through the well known "pull." I would like to admire my co-workers for their good qualities; I would like to envy their brains and ability; I would like them to compel my respect and bring out the best in me. But this man brings out the devil in me. I quote and paraphrase the best in poetry and prose to confuse and confound him;—and he thinks I'm "nuts;" which opinion tickles me, because he doesn't know or understand. Can you recommend a good book by an "authority" on office manners? or is there such a thing? I shall appreciate your advice. K. H. M.

A Term of Respect Used by Gentlemen

DEAR K. H. M.: I am not sure that you have a leg to stand on, in making mock of your "said co-worker's" faithful usage of "sir," as a token of respect in addressing his chief. Actually, it is quite correct,—indeed, a traditional rule of courtesy among gentlemen,—for one man to salute another man of greater age, achievement and/or responsible position with the term "sir." Mannerly school boys are trained to so address their men teachers; college men of good breeding use the term in speaking directly to their professors; and likewise, it is a term of affectionate respect commonly used by well-mannered boys and young men (and men not so young) in speaking to "dad," or acknowledging his remarks. As Webster's explains: "Sir is a respectful title used in addressing a man without using his name."

What more natural then,—than that a young man with a healthy respect for "men of achievement," whose achievements he hopes some day to equal, would use the term "sir," as an occasional alternative to Col. Blank (or Mister Blank), when conversing with his chief, officially or socially? It seems to me that the term thus employed, properly signifies the respect which is the older man's due in that particular tete-a-tete; and reflects credit on the younger man, as being unenviously ready to acknowledge the older man's comparative superiority, in impersonal language coined by gentlemen. However, a marked tendency to overwork the term obviously would be greatly distasteful to any listener,—including the person being "sir-ed." In that case, the effect would vary from ludicrous to unbearably tedious,—and would, in my opinion, put the user under suspicion of being another Uriah Heep: that odious fellow in the novel, "David Copperfield," whose servile hand-rubbing and unctuous deference to his all-and-sundry "betters" make him one of the most sinister characters in the realm of fiction; and fully prepares the reader for Heep's final expose as a scoundrelly, power-seeking hypocrite, who had clothed his cold cunning in the mantle of humility.

Speaking of Manners, How About Her Own?

So, in regard to your criticism of your co-worker: If his "sir" is only an occasional substitute for "Mister" or "Colonel," used casually in conversation with his chief,—as "Yes, sir," or "Thank you, sir," or "These are the facts, sir,"—he has right on his side. But if (as you allege) he goes to such lengths as, "Sir, I would like you to glance over these papers sir, because Major Blank wants them back by noon sir, and I promised him sir you would try to get to them before that time sir—," then his performance is tragi-comic; and I am surprised his boss can stomach it. In truth, I doubt that any man of boss-caliber could,—or would. Which obliges me to think you are naughtily exaggerating. And by the way: How about your own manners? Since when has it been anything but the worst of taste,—the most ostentatious intellectual vulgarity,—to deliberately parade one's stock of literary learning for the sole purpose of "confusing and confounding" a supposed dumb cluck? As for your final inquiry,—I have never run across "a good book by an authority on office manners." So far as I know, that civilizing text book remains yet to be written. M. H.

Take It and Like It

By Grace Martin
Associated Press Feature Writer

You will be sailing into your Christmas shopping before long. And today might be a good time to check up on your shopping technique, for you are certainly going to need one this year.

In the first place make a list of the things you have to buy.

Next, make a list of alternate choices, in case you can't get what you want. And finally clean out your handbag before you start, so you will carry a lightweight orderly bag when you go.

These are the things to take with you, but there are two things you must be sure to leave at home—your temper and impatience.

You know some things are short this year. You know there are not as many clerks and elevator operators. And you know deliveries are not the same as they used to be. Then why should you act as though fate had taken a particular poke at you when you run into one of them? Just take it—and take it easy.

And if you get tired you might divert yourself with the idea of how much tireder the boys got at Salerno.

Martha Ellyn's Platter Chatter

October with its blaze of color is the time when steak frys are usually staged. But steak procurement being what it is makes us turn to other meats to cook out of doors.

Martha Ellyn

These early autumn evenings are cool but not chilly. They are perfect for out-of-doors barbecue suppers. Of course if you haven't a place to cook out of doors, then you will have to set the inside scene in out-doorsey atmosphere. That won't be difficult. Use pumpkins and gourds, grapes and pears, and other fall products for the center piece.

If you are among the fortunate ones who can boast a barbecue oven in you yard, you have the first requisite for a gala party. Set the outdoor table with colorful mats and bring forth your gay pottery dishes. No eggshell-thin china goes at this gathering. Plan supper early for dusk comes soon to autumn evenings. Candles in hurricane lamps will give flattering and adequate illumination.

Let spareribs take the place of steak. Your guests will find them every bit as delectable as beef if you give thought to their preparation. Have you ever brushed spareribs with red wine barbecue sauce during the broiling? If you haven't you have missed a delicious bet.

Spareribs are an especially happy choice since they cost but 2 red points per pound. Five pounds will make a feast for six persons. And the delightful aroma of ribs barbecueing will be an added pleasure for your guests.

What to serve with the barbecued ribs? Well, let's plan a menu. Here's a suggestion.

Barbecued Spareribs
Baked Potatoes
Sweet-Sour Red Cabbage
Hard Rolls or Hot Biscuits
Apple Tarts Coffee
Red Wine

The above menu will be just as appropriate for an indoor supper as one cooked in the open. Here are the receipes for making the Barbecued Spareribs and Red Cabbage:

Barbecued Spareribs, Red Wine

Crush 1 clove garlic in 1 cup claret, burgundy, cabernet or any red table wine. Add ¼ cup vinegar, ½ cup salad oil, 2 grated onions, 3 sieved tomatoes, 1 tablespoon brown sugar, 1 tablespoon salt, 1 teaspoon pepper, 2 tablespoons Worcestershire sauce, ¼ teaspoon chili powder and a dash of cayenne. Mix well. Place 5 to 6 pounds spareribs in a large baking pan. Pour on sauce. Bake in a moderately hot over (375 degrees F.) 1½ hours or until ribs are browned. Baste with sauce in bottom of the ban several times during the baking period. Serves 6.

Red Cabbage In Wine

Combine 1 cup claret, burgundy, cabernet or any red table wine with 1 cup boiling water and bring to a full boil. Add 1 head shredded red cabbage, 3 sliced cooking apples, 1 teaspoon salt and 2 small minced onions. Cook these ingredients about 10 minutes or until tender. Add ¼ cup sugar. Blend 1 tablespoon butter or margarine with 2 tablespoons flour and add to the cabbage mixture. Cook slowly, stirring constantly until wine sauce is thickened and smooth. Serve with spareribs.

Your Figure, Madame!

By Ida Jean Kain

If you are a working girl, you have no business getting fat or losing your figure. Not if you expect to go on up the success ladder. You have to be fit to make that climb.

In your kind of work, you don't need as many calories as you would in standing all day long, and not nearly as many as you would in work in which you walked around. Sitting on the job, you use .60 calories per pound per hour; standing, relaxed, .63 calories per pound per hour; and walking slowly, 1.21 calories.

It isn't necesasry to figure out your energy requirements to the last calorie, but that gives you a rough idea of why it is you can't get away with a lot of food. You don't do the vigorous, muscular work that burns calories.

But while you don't need three big meals a day, you do need just as many green vegetables and as much milk—a full pint—as anyone else.

Make your three meals measure up to the nutrition yardstick. You should be well acquainted with it by now—one pint of milk, one egg, two fruits, one a citrus; two or three vegetables, one always the green leafy kind, cooked or in a salad; whole grain bread and cereal; lean meat, fish or fowl. Follow that yardstick for 30 days and you'll see how much more ambitious you feel.

"We Too, Can Serve!" They Cry; And Prove It

Teen-Age Jangos Give Lesson in War Aid To Whole Country by Their Nursing Services

By Elizabeth Henney

"Hello, Dad! Happy Birthday!" is what young Betty Rosser will be saying through the microphone tomorrow evening. And that phrase, and the contents of a birthday letter she will read will be broadcast over the air waves. Who knows, it may even be picked up on the short-wave circuits and find its way through the ether to where "Dad," Lieut. Comdr. M. T. Rosser, U. S. Navy, is now serving as a flight surgeon.

Anyway the recorded transcription of the broadcast, together with a picture of Betty, will be sent to "Dad," and he will get his birthday message sometime, somewhere, out there at the front.

One of the reasons Betty will be on the air tomorrow is because she belongs to and is working with the Jangos, that organization of young service girls that has hurtled into the national limelight lately and captured the imagination of the country.

Why? Because teen-age girls have been quietly and consistently proving to the world that they, as well as their big sisters, are capable of serving their country in time of emergency, and of serving it faithfully and well.

When the Jangos (Junior Army-Navy Group, Organized Services) first developed the idea of the Jango Junior Nurses, they were scoffed at, pretty much. They were actually planning to let 14- to 18-year-old girls assist nurses in the hospitals! And of course everyone knew girls that age were too young for responsibility! That is, everyone except the Jangos, who were confident they had the answer to the nursing shortage problem.

An Experiment That Really Worked

They did a good selling job of their idea. Doctors Hospital agreed to let them try out the idea. That was in May, 1942. They have been working untiringly since that day, and there are now over 170 of them on duty at Doctors Hospital alone. A Chicago hospital has persuaded them to establish a unit there and hospitals all over the country are watching the experiment with evergrowing interest.

Friday will be a red-letter day in the lives of at least twenty-eight of the girls, for on that evening, in the District Medical Society Auditorium, that group will be capped, in a formal "Capping Ceremony," which means that they have completed a 132-hour course of training in nurses' aide work and have each given 200 hours of duty on the floors of Doctors Hospital in the last six months. Which is quite an accomplishment, inasmuch as they are also keeping to their full program of school work, and give this time before and after school hours and over the weekends during the school year.

Maj. Gen. Norman T. Kirk, the Surgeon General of the Army, will be the principal speaker at the ceremony and Dr. Charles Stanley White, president of Doctors Hospital, will give greetings and introduce distinguished visitors.

Those hard-won caps which will be presented will be gay affairs of a cheery, bright blue, trimmed with a red and white candy striped piping to match their jumper uniforms.

So much attention has their work commanded lately that Life magazine recently devoted their front page, and a large space in their issue to pictures and a story of Jangos; they have been featured in a girls' magazine; and Pathe News has recently made a short newsreel of their work.

Daughters, sisters or relatives of officers in the armed forces, these girls have a keen interest in bringing the war to an early and victorious close, and they are setting a pace that will keep their elders racing to equal.

Service Club Ready for Busy Season

A bigger and better Officers' Service Club for the United Nations is looking forward to a busy season at the Burlington Hotel.

The club quarters, enlarged and redecorated, will be completely in order in the next two weeks, for members of the committee are busy putting in place new furnishings, gifts and "loans" from their friends. The ballroom had been redecorated and turned into a spacious lounge with cloakrooms attached and weekly Friday dances will be held there. There will be Sunday afternoon tea dances with club hostesses on hand for partners and the Saturday night dances will be held, as usual at various hotels.

The Officers' Service Club for the United Nations is sponsored by Recreation Services, Inc., a Community War Fund service, and is equipped with a number of services for offices beside its social functions. One of its most useful and popular services is the housing desk where trained workers give aid and comfort to officers and their wives in solving their housing problems. Last month, alone, more than 800 officers or their wives sought help from the housing desk. About half of this number wanted hotel accommodations while the rest required apartments or rooms in private homes. The housing desk found hotel rooms for all who applied for them and settled a large number of home-seekers in places to their liking.

One very young officer and his even younger bride found themselves unable to afford any of the furnished apartments listed at that particular time. Nothing daunted, the worker in charge of the housing desk at the Officers' Service Club suggested an unfurnished apartment with simple but adequate furniture to be rented separately. This arrangement filled all requirements and addresses and advice were given by the housing desk, even a list of necessary kitchen utensils to be bought from the "five and ten" was produced when the bride admitted shyly that she knew nothing of housekeeping. Now the housing desk won't be a bit nonplussed if she comes back for advice on how to use them.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was gowned in the traditional bridal white, with scalloped neckline and long-pointed sleeves. The bodice of faille was long and ended in a flower design which was appliqued on the full net skirt which ended in a train. Her full length veil of tulle was held to her hair by a coronet of feather flowers and she carried a sheaf of large white chrysanthemums.

Following the ceremony there was a reception at the home of the bride's parents, 3202 Klingle Road, for old friends and relatives of the families.

About a Washington Visitor and Her Famous 'Desert Battalion'—Morale Aid for the Fighting Forces

SHE'S DAINTY, dynamic and delightful. She's a born promoter and organizer . . . and when a project is her pet, it's as good as finished before it's half started. She's Mrs. Edward G. Robinson, wife of the film star, and she's now in the East to make final arrangements for a breath-taking, patriotic extravaganza that will be hitting the headlines early next year.

Coming to Washington for a few days' visit, she relaxed awhile yesterday to celebrate her birthday at an informal luncheon given by her close friend, Mrs. Claude Pepper, in the Senate dining room. Earlier, she dropped by the Women's National

Democratic Club to make a brief speech. Later in the afternoon she was a teatime guest of Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss, and last night she took over the spotlight at the Stage Door Canteen.

In her apartment yesterday morning at the Mayflower, Mrs. Robinson told me something about her famous Desert Battalion—a volunteer group of around 600 working girls who aid soldiers' morale by visiting service camps each week. It's the same organization, by the way, that has been featured regularly on the radio for some time; got itself incorporated a couple of months ago, and now has high hopes of getting to Broadway as a kind of distaff version of "This Is the Army."

Formerly California State chairman of the National Women's Division, USO, Mrs. Robinson found out early in the spring of 1942 that the job of providing entertainment and recreation for men in service camps was a gigantic task. Her famous Desert Battalion, beginning as a group of 50 girls, was her answer to the problem. The first small "battalion," comprised of young women from 18 to 25, most of whom were employed in Los Angeles, went to Camp Young, Desert Training Center, then under command of Gen. George Patton. The initial entertainment venture was so successful that other camps began asking Mrs. Robinson to bring her girls to dance there.

Within a few months, two truckloads of young women were leaving Los Angeles' Biltmore Hotel every Saturday afternoon. The girls paid for their own tickets. Arrived at camp, they dined and danced with the boys, put on special entertainment programs, managed to live and be gay through the terrific heat that spreads itself across the desert like a blanket . . . and departed in a wave of glory, and gratitude from the soldiers, just in time to get back to home base Sunday night.

For more than a year, new members for the Desert Battalion have been recruited over the radio. Each month, more and more girls have volunteered to join "suicide battalions" to brave the desert sun and a temperature that sometimes soars to 140 degrees, and to lose four days' pay from their jobs—just to dance with the soldiers and make them feel they are not forgotten.

Not connected with the USO—yet cooperating with it on countless occasions—the Desert Battalion was incorporated at the petition of Mrs. Robinson, Mrs. Samuel Berch and Mrs. Crane Wilbur as a nondividend, nonprofit organization. Early next year, privately backed, it will present a musical comedy with a desert background; ballet under the direction of Agnes DeMille, and some of the liveliest tunes anybody has heard since "Oklahoma" first hit the boards. Proceeds? They'll be turned over—every single penny—to an important project for soldiers returning from the battle zone.

Mrs. Robinson came here a few days ago from New York where she has been consulting leading designers and working out costumes for members of her Desert Battalion. When she heads Westward the latter part of this week, she will take along with her a complete sample wardrobe that would make any woman green with envy. All the dresses are smart, functional, comparatively cheap, and wrinkle proof, and can be packed in a small bag.

First date on Mrs. Robinson's program after she returns will be at the Victorville (Calif.) Army Air Field on Saturday, where a special Desert Battalion weekend party has been planned. The schedule? Well, it includes a steak dinner with the men of the field at 7 p. m., on Saturday; a dance later, a midnight snack; and on Sunday, breakfast with the men, a swimming party, and dance in the afternoon, dinner Sunday evening and informal dancing later. That just gives you an idea.

...ur 'Information Bureau' ...ets Its Backlog of Facts

...E SIDE-LINE FUNCTION of Public Information Bureau, ...d for this department by the lust for information, desire to ...bets, and sometimes idle curiosity, of the fillum fan, has been ...simplified by receipt of the 1943-44 edition of the International Motion Picture Almanac, just off the press.

...DA ...PINO

This invaluable compendium, gotten out yearly by the Martin Quigley Publications—publishers of the Motion Picture Herald, foremost of the industry's trade journals—runs to an approximate 1100 pages, contains a complete section devoted to the film industry in the war effort and embodies 12,000 thumbnail biographies of stars, featured players, directors, writers, technicians and divers and sundry others closely affiliated with the complex business of picture-making.

Furthermore, it contains a meaty editorial by the veteran Terry Ramsaye, editor in chief of the ...rous Quigley handbooks. Mr. Ramsaye points out some in...ing facts concerning the 1942-43 Hollywood output.

...the single film year of 1942-43, says he, the American screen ...served with 50,486 minutes of entertainment film. At the ...me peak of the silent picture era, the American industry dis...buted about 5,112,000 feet, negative length, which reduced to ...160 screen minutes. Harking back to the 1912-13 period of the ...ckelodeon, one-reeler zenith, Mr. Ramsaye finds that the gross ...otage offered the American exhibitor was close to 7,000,000 ...et, representing something in the neighborhood of 93,000 min...es of running time. "So it appears that from the humble nickelodeon era to the effulgent now there has been a diminution of output, in terms of screen time offered, of about 53 per cent." He might have added that quality has improved in direct proportion to the diminution in quantity. Or even more so!

If you went to the movies once a week, the writer continues, it would take five years and about four months to see all the 1942-43 product. The single item of newsreels runs to 78 hours, overall negative length, or nine days and six hours of looking, "after which you would have seen considerable war." To put those 1942-43 programs through the theater projectors used a grand total, in positive film footage, of 106,139,744,000 sprocket holes—and every one had to be in precisely the right place, and was. That, Mr. Ramsaye discovers, is precision!

Soldiery Shies Away from War Films

The boys in uniform attending the War Department Theaters during September, didn't concern themselves too much with the battle-front features, but went in preponderantly for "escapist" screen fare. By the October 9 report of the United States Army Motion Picture Service, the five September box-office champions, on the basis of Army camp attendance, were "This Is the Army"—by no means a "war picture," despite its title—"Johnny Come Lately" (the Jimmy Cagney business, coming next to Loew's Palace), "Destroyer," "Best Foot Forward" and "Let's Face It." "Destroyer" must feel sorta lonesome in that gay company!

And speaking of such, Irving Berlin's "This Is the Army," in its film manifestation, is turning out to be the all-time, holdover and box-office champion—according to the Warner boys, who made it. Averaging 80 per cent more playing time than any other picture ever released by the Burbank company, the film—proceeds from which are going to Army Emergency Relief to an estimated tune of about 10 million dollars—recently completed its eighth week on Broadway, is in its sixth week in five key cities, fifth week in 16, fourth in 10 and third in 30 other spots. The money "take," of course, is in proportion.

Confusion Unconfounded

Alexander Gray, singing the role of Franz Schubert in "Blossom Time" at the National this week, thoughtfully calls up to set the record straight. Having sung the role throughout the eminently successful New York engagement just ended, Mr. Gray is modifying his determination not to sing the part on the road to the extent of appearing in it for the current Washington week only. Roy Barnes, nominated to succeed Mr. Gray, it seems was not prepared to fill in in time for the E Street engagement. Despite some misleading legends on its reverse, it is Mr. Gray's picture, after all, that appears on this page today with the sprightly Miss Barbara Scully, about whose identity there has never been any question. So now you know.

The Apex Theater confides that it will not be everlastingly offended if it leaks out that it will be breaking out a de luxe, double bill tomorrow and Thursday. Its components will be RKO-Radio's "Squadron Leader," with Ann Dvorak (remember her?) and Eric Portman, and "My Favorite Blonde," in which Madeleine Carroll fulfills that description in the view of Bob Hope—and everybody else, for that matter.

As a reward—or is it penalty?—for having scored so decisively in "Thank Your Lucky Stars," now on view at the Metropolitan Theater, incidentally, Ida Lupino, Humphrey Bogart, John Garfield and Alexis Smith have been assigned to do new specialties in the Warners' "Hollywood Canteen."

Franz Schubert's deathless melodies, so deftly arranged and amplified by Sigmund Romberg; Dorothy Donnellys, poignantly romantic libretto and lyrics, skillfully adapted from the stalwart originals of A. M. Willner and H. Reichert, and a cast largely familiar to Capital theatergoers, last night once again brought "Blossom Time" into radiant bloom at the National Theater, to the evident gratification of such an ample and enthusiastic audience as this hardy perennial always attracts.

Last evening's performance of the operetta that has been accepted as the standard among the lighter musical offerings through more than a score of years was the most dignified and most respectful to the memory of the composer about whose life and works it revolves that Washington has seen in recent years. Its three acts were capably acted and sung, its hoary comic pattern scrupulously observed, but unblemished by the boisterous horseplay that so often has marred it, and both settings and costuming were such as to emphasize the regard in which the Messrs. Shubert hold this enduring companion-piece to "The Student Prince."

No need now to dwell upon the beauty and the bitterness of the story of the great master's love for the vixenish Mitzi Kranz, or the confusion of identities and spiteful gossip that resulted in such tragic disillusionment for them both. And it certainly would be a work of supererogation to recall that "Serenade," "Song of Love," "Tell Me, Daisy," "Keep It Dark," "Lonely Heart," and most of the other numbers that make up the score, are among the imperishables of lyric composition. It remains, then, only to record that the cast is one of vocal competence and excellent balance.

To the role of Schubert, in which Capital theatergoers of late years have become accustomed to see Everett Marshall, Alexander Gray brings a full equipment. Long a figure of prominence on the musical stage, and formerly one of the screen's more conspicuous singing stars, Mr. Gray displays a barytone of fine resonance and plays with a repression proper to the bashfulness and diffidence of the character he impersonates.

In the prima donna role of Mitzi, the youthful and vivacious Barbara Scully, familiar to National patrons from earlier appearances here in both "Blossom Time" and "The Student Prince," reveals a greatly improved soprano that has acquired both richness and power through its entire range since last heard on the same stage. Her aliveness, sparkle and blonde beauty have always been endowments it would have been difficult to enhance in charm or effectiveness.

The comedy part of Kranz, formerly intrusted to the clownish Detmar Poppen, has been inherited by Douglas Leavitt, another veteran funster, whose methods are more subdued but no less prolific in laughs. His comic antics are ably seconded by Billy Kent, long one of the theater's most expert practitioners in musical comedy fun. As the irresistible lover and dour feminine menace, respectively, Roy Cropper performs his tenor functions ably, as Baron Schober, and Helene Arthur presents a flashing figure as Bellabruna, the vengeful opera star and undutiful wife. Victor Morley continues efficiently as her meekly outraged husband, Scharntoff.

There are several among the lesser players who contribute greatly to the uniform excellence of the ensemble. Conspicuous among them are Grace Worth, who lifts the minor role of Kitzi into notice; Roy Barnes, a seeming fixture in the character of Vogel: Marion Bradley, the flower girl, and Ruth Lockwood, the harassed Mrs. Kranz.

"Blossom Time," needless to say, is not what it was 21 years ago. But it is still a welcome addition to any season and no doubt will continue to be for another 21 years to come. It is made of stuff that doesn't wear out.

TRAVEL NOTE: Admiral Sir Andrew Browne Cunningham, Britain's newly appointed First Sea Lord and Chief of the Naval Staff, is a shy, quiet man. One year ago, when he visited here, the admiral was the principal guest at a small luncheon in Washington. The soft-spoken seaman told us then of his plan for combating the submarine menace. And his face was tragic when he discussed Britain's losses . . . But his face must have been brighter on the eve of the invasion of Sicily—for it was Admiral Cunningham who was selected to choose the code-word for beginning the attack against Europe. The word he chose was "Retribution."

PAUL WHITEMAN

MUSIC DEPT.: When Henry Ford was undecided about changing the radio program he sponsors—from a program of news-commentating to one of music—a number of audition-recordings were submitted to him. One of these was by Paul Whiteman's orchestra . . . Ford ruled against a music program, and continued the news series, because when he played the Whiteman recordings, he found that he was unable to beat time with his foot.

ART DEPT.: Lieut. Col. Serge Obolensky, the Russian prince who once was Vincent Astor's brother-in-law, was mentioned in recent dispatches as the hero who parachuted over Sardinia, and brought Eisenhower's message to the Italian commandant. . . . Col. Obolensky was a Czarist officer in the last war. At that time one of Russia's noted artists had Obolensky pose for him, "because you typify an aristocracy which just is disappearing." That painting now is in Obolensky's home in New York. It has two bullet holes in it. For during the Revolution, it had been displayed on a Petrograd wall, under a sign reading, "Wanted. Dead or Alive."

BEAUTY DEPT.: Carl Brisson told Maxie Rosenbloom of the offer made to him last week, to appear in the new movie version of "The Hairy Ape." . . . "That's a coincidence," said Rosenbloom, "because my agent said I was up for that role." . . . "In my case, it'll be different," said Brisson. "You see, Maxie, they want me to paly it with make-up."

THEATER DEPT.: Five years ago Mary Martin made her stage debut, with Victor Moore and William Gaxton, in "Leave It to Me," at the Imperial Theater. The next day's front pages recorded her triumph in singing "My Heart Belongs to Daddy" . . . Last week Miss Martin returned to Broadway, at the same theater, in her second show—this time as a star, in "One Touch of Venus" . . . "Am I going to have the same dressing room?" she asked the producers, who told her: "No. You're going to have the star's dressing room" . . . "Which one?" asked Mary. "Gaxton's or Moore's? . . . "We've torn down the walls," she learned. "You'll have both dressing rooms."

BUSINESS DEPT.: Sam Goldwyn discussed with a visitor the business of making pictures. "Yes, I'm lucky. I've been successful so far," said Goldwyn. . . . "It isn't just luck," said the visitor. "Now take Shaw. George Bernard Shaw once said he owed his success to the fact that he outlived his contemporaries." . . . "But that doesn't go in Hollywood," said Goldwyn. "The trouble with my contemporaries out here is that they're tough."

FINANCE DEPT.: Swifty Morgan, the sportsman, world-traveler and legendary character, was in Reuben's plying his current trade—that of tie-salesman. Morgan's background is somewhat mysterious. One of his friends, in trying to learn part of Swifty's history, made the wild suggestion: "I hear, Swifty, that you're the brother of the head of the Radio Corp. of America." . . . "If my brother were head of the Radio Corp. of America, would I be selling ties in Reuben's?" was Swifty's logical answer. "No. I'd be selling ties at Radio City."

SOCIAL NOTE: Walter Wanger, the Hollywood producer, received an old friend at his office and opened a box of cigars for him. "Here," Wanger invited, "have a Churchill cigar" . . . "You mean Winston Churchill gave these to you?" asked his friend . . . "Oh, no. That's just the same brand he smokes," replied Wanger. "As a matter of fact, Churchill hasn't met me yet."

MOVIES: Dr. Morris Fishbein, head of the American Medical Association, went to Radio City Music Hall last week. The movie hall was crowded, and he went down one of the aisles, searching for an empty seat. . . . "Follow me to Aisle 7," an usher whispered to him. "There ain't no seats here." . . . Dr. Fishbein ignored the request and continued to hunt for a seat . . . "There ain't no seats here, so follow me to Aisle 7," the usher repeated. Dr. Fishbein again ignored the request . . . "Didn't you hear me?" asked the usher. "There ain't no seats here. Follow me to Aisle 7" . . . "I'll follow you to Aisle 7," said Dr. Fishbein, "but not ungrammatically."

HEDDA HOPPER

Seek Paulette for Latin Role

Hollywood, Calif., Oct. 11—Paramount bought an original about Curacao, a South American city, from Stuart Cloette, who's on his way out to do the screen play. Johnny Farrow directs. It's highly dramatic. They hope Paulette Goddard will star in it. Paulette, having made so many trips to Mexico, surely knows her Latins. She's sporting a gigantic gold wrist watch which she took off the wrist of a Mexican general. She thought it looked too feminine on him. . . . Charlie Smith, "Dizzy" of the Aldrichs, joins Murphy, in New York for his play, "Sleep It Off," with Ann Corio. She plays a strip teaser who gets into much difficulty when she finds herself in a fraternity house. No more Aldrichs till next summer. They're three ahead now. . . . Walter Pidgeon has had many trips to New York, but the present one will stand out in his memory—but always. . . . Greer Garson at Romanoff's with George Raft and Charlie Feldman. She'll put up at the River club in New York before pushing off to Canada.

PAULETTE GODDARD

Who's to Blame?

Spencer Tracy, Marilyn Maxwell and a lady guitarist at the airport were all set to take off for Alaska and the Aleutians to entertain our men up there when they discovered their plane priority took them only to San Francisco: I presume from there they were to hitchhike a sky ride to Alaska. Where, where was our Victory Committee? If Spencer didn't go, or any other star of his caliber, they'd be the first to bleat about it. . . . From two different sources (I might add, the boys themselves) I learned that in Iceland, where one was stationed 16 months, the only live entertainment they got were four girls and two men in an act so bad it would have been hissed off the stage any other place. A lieutenant stationed there 10 months never saw any acts. Yes, they got films like "Of Mice and Men." The short wave radio situation was no better. They call it "the island God forgot," and would rather be in the thick of fighting on any front than go back.

Vote Getting

Congressman Will Rogers, jr., in town talking to his constituents. He's still exercised over refugee Jewish situation in Palestine. Says over there planes and more planes are needed. "What about the need in the South Pacific?" said I. Young Will replied, "I presume they need 'em there too." He came through from Washington on a priority. All Congressmen get 'em.

Chin Up

Lorraine Rognan, the courageous, clever dancer who lost her husband at Lisbon when they were going overseas to entertain, called to say goodby. She's going over again alone. Our producers should be mighty ashamed. What she wanted, after recovery from a broken leg, was a job. Not sympathy, pity, or charity, but a job. And if any girl deserved one, Lorraine did. Did she get it? No. Only promises . . . Nurse Elizabeth Kenny, after speaking in New York and Chicago, arrives here for a lecture and to confer with Mary McCarthy and Rosalind Russell on her life story . . . Anita Colby and her cover girls, being given a parting party by the Dick Smarts, may have to linger longer. No accommodations out.

The National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs selected Roz Russell as the typical career woman. She'll get a right smart plaque from Mary Briggs and Grace Stoermer.

Women's Club News

By Genevieve Reynolds

Money price definitions and commodity quality definitions are the Siamese twins of price control—neither can live without the other. So declared S. Schenker, head of the textile, leather and apparel section of the standards division of the Office of Price Administration.

GENEVIEVE REYNOLDS

Guest speaker at the Woman's National Democratic Club's luncheon meeting yesterday, he said: "Control of price alone will not prevent inflation, since the price of a commodity means little unless the characteristics of that commodity are known."

He told how prices had been set, but that in an effort to produce unrationed shoes, for example, substitutes for leather soles had lowered the standard. So, whereas you pay the same price for the so-called same shoes, in many cases it is a waste of time to manufacture them because of their poor wearing qualities.

"Inflation arises as a result of increase in money price or a decrease in quality or serviceability of the merchandise bought," explained Mr. Schenker. "If a pair of shoes bought this year wears half as long as a pair bought last year at the same price, the cost of shoes to a worker has doubled just as much as though he paid twice as many dollars, and the shoe wore as long."

In normal times, the competitive economic forces which operate to hold prices down also operate to hold the general level of quality up, with the result that the cost of living is, by and large, held within reasonable bounds. But in wartime, with scarcities of materials, of machines, of manpower and with an overabundance of free money, these forces are reversed. They develop a strong tendency to drive money prices up, and also to drive quality down. It is for the purpose of counteracting this wartime tendency that price control was instituted, according to the speaker.

"Washable dresses in which the colors run; seams that pull apart at the very suggestion of a strain; dresses that shrink to such a degree that a reducing diet would be necessary to make them fit," asserted Mr. Schenker." These and many other conditions that even in normal times represent waste, should not be tolerated when our economy is so overburdened."
